Dear Mother:-

Your very welcome and interesting letter was received a day or two ago. Bonnie is out tonight and the children are all in bed and at present in dreamland or at least in the land of nod, so I will embrace this quiet opportunity to answer your kind letter. I will enclose also a letter which Corvus wrote to his uncle Herbert. It is written so fine that he will probably not be able to make it all out but I will not interpret it for him. Let him exercise his ingenuity. It will do him good and probably sharpen his wits - a thing very necessary for a professor whose duty it is to teach and interpret the uncouth and barbarous Hunsprache. Well, our winter seems to be broken. Yesterday was quite mild and we had rain and constant thaw. To-day was also mild but a little colder. We had some quite heavy snow squalls this afternoon. But the days are growing so bright and the sun is getting so high that we feel that the winter is almost over. Only last Sunday morning, however, the thermometer registered 11 degrees below zero, but the temperature rose rapidly through the day, and on the whole
