

LUTHERAN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

AND

WATERLOO COLLEGE

WATERLOO, ONT.

Mar. 1, 1925-

Dear Mother:

As I have been at home, really more than at home all day, I have no excuse for not giving you my weekly letter at the regular time. What I mean by "more than at home" is that we are in on quarantine. I told you in my last letter of Carolus' being sick. Well, he felt well enough to start to school on Wednesday morning, but when he came home at noon he had a suspicious looking rash on his face and I kept him at home the rest of the day. Thursday morning his face, hands, arms and body were pretty well peppered with rash. I sent for the Dr. who examined him and diagnosed the case as Chicken-pox. In order to make sure of it I had him to call in also the Health Officer who confirmed the diagnosis and said it was undoubtedly Chicken-pox. Carolus is not very sick, but is still in bed and is thoroughly peppered. A placard was put on the house and I have had to keep all the children at home from school since Wednesday noon. I am allowed to go over to the Seminary for my lectures, but have not been anywhere else since then. I could have gone down to Church this morning, but thought it better to stay away. One thing about the case is that I have not been altogether satisfied in my own mind that it is Chicken-pox that Carolus has. He has the