My dear Bejean:

Please accept my sincere thanks for your kind letter.

I regret that the number of communications received since July 28th has been such as to render impossible more by way of reply than the briefest of acknowledgments. I should, however, like the many friends who have written me at this time to know how much I appreciate the comments and observations they have been good enough to make with respect to the recent elections. Particularly do I value the conviction so generally expressed, and which I firmly hold, that all will yet prove to be for the best.

May I thank you especially for what your letter conveys of your kind personal confidence and regard.

Yours very sincerely,

W. L. Mackenzie King
