Dear Mother:

May 24, 1936.

It is now after supper and I am late in getting a letter started to you; but "better late than never," as the old saying goes; and you will get it at the same time anyway. So there is not anything lost after all. We had a fine day to-day. It opened up with a shower, which conveniently let up in time for me to take my 57th swim for the season in the lake in the park before breakfast this morning. I was a little later than usual in getting down there to-day, and I found two people, presumably a man and his wife, dressing after their earlier dip. The day was a little threatening, but cleared up later on and became fine and clear and cool. This day was notable in that it was the day for the baccalaureate services for the College graduates, ten in number. The services were held in St. Matthew's Church, St. Charles, Pastor Dahmstedt preaching the sermon and Dr. Fox, president of the University of Western Ontario, delivering an address to the graduates. I had a little part in the service, having been selected to read the General Prayer and pronounce the Benediction. The whole service was broadcast and this was the first time that my voice was ever heard over the air. Some of
