Universal Military Training

For nearly a year now we have been seeing upon the streets, in the shops, in the trains, in the theater, everywhere that men congregate at all, splendid specimens of young manhood, wearing the khaki of the army or the blue of the navy. We have seen these boys blossom out into a physical perfection of which we should never have dreamed had their ways continued in the old lines.

Camp life, military drill and discipline, the constant thought of a great duty to be discharged, the new dignity which was assumed because of the uniform and the cause in which they had enlisted to fight, have made of our boys men of the very finest physical type. Eyes look straight ahead or into the face of the person addressed. Feet no longer shuffle, shoulders no longer droop, chests are thrown out and the lungs filled with the fresh air which has the healthful effect of the tonic.

It has become almost a habit with those who reluctantly see our boys enter into the dreadful scenes which are a part of the war to say: "If it only ended with the training camp, how worth while it would be!"

This is precisely what would follow the institution of universal obligatory military training. It would end with the training camp, because the very fact that so great a nation as the United States stood ready to establish its rights or those of any smaller nation which was threatened, would serve as a very effective deterrent to an over ambitious power. If the United States had been as ready for war as France, for instance, there would have been no twentieth century Armageddon, for Germany would never have undertaken the task of world subjugation had she known that she had the United States arrayed against her and ready to apply that force almost at a day's notice.

As a preventive of war universal military training would be a powerful factor. As a health measure it would have no rival in effectiveness. We have seen men made over in a few short weeks of life under intensive training. We may, if we choose, see every succeeding generation enjoy the same advantages without the necessity to lay that increased efficiency upon the altar of American freedom. It is in these two elements of the universal training policy that the strength of the argument lies. Nothing more should be necessary. There ought to be no doubt of the passage of the universal military training measure, the Chamberlain bill, but, unfortunately, there is. Public opinion is so indefinite that Congress fears to commit itself. If you believe in keeping the boys fit, tell your Congressmen so.

PLEASE DO NOT ASK THE OPERATOR FOR THE TIME OF DAY

We answer the question:

HUNDREDS OF TIMES A DAY.

"What time is it?"

Notwithstanding this service—furnished without charge—has always been a severe burden we have gladly given it as a convenience, especially to the school children, who have used it most.

But Now We Must Discontinue The Practice In Order To Save Time, Labor and Apparatus.

War conditions are producing increasing demands upon our switchboard and other facilities for important domestic, commercial and governmental messages, therefore,
