German Purpose and German Peace

Germany's purpose in the war is made evident from every step which is taken. The "peace terms" imposed upon Russia and Roumania tell it, terms which are intended to cripple those nations so that they may never again become stumbling blocks in the path of progress of Germany. The enemy country subjugated,—that is Russia, that is Roumania, today.

War is never gentle with the enemy country but Germany's policy is no less selfish with friends than with a late antagonist. Austria by the terms of the agreement arranged between the two emperors is established as scarcely more than a province of Germany. It is an incident to the Prussian domination begun and extended to the utmost that the present conditions of European nations permit.

That similar terms would be the portion of Italy, of France, of any nation which should now seek or accept a separate peace with the Kaiser can no more be doubted than the rising of tomorrow's sun. As a conclusive argument against harkening to the sweet sounding peace proposals from the war party of Germany these countries which have heard and listened stand without answer. Whoever accepts peace of the Kaiser's making, accepts vassalage to the German crown. It is not the kind that any other of the Allies cares to have.

The Dependent Wives

The new call upon the man-power of the Village lends authority to the statement that the United States will have two million men in the fields in France before the year is out. The exhaustion of Class I brings it home to us in a peculiar way what the war is going to mean. So long as it has taken the single men, those who can most easily be spared from the industrial and domestic life of the country, there has not been the disruption of our everyday routine which will come with the taking of men whose relations are more closely knit up with the general life.

The next call may be for men who are married to childless women who are able to earn their own livings, generally thought of as those who before their marriage were engaged in gainful occupations, either from necessity or choice. But there should be no such distinction made, nor will there be by the women who have a proper degree of patriotism. Any woman who seeks to hold her husband from service because she shrinks from working to earn her own support while other women are making that sacrifice is unworthy to be shielded. The physical and mental capacity of childless wives to do something well enough to receive pay for it should be the only measure of the eligibility of their husbands for service, providing, of course, that they are able to stand the test.

The theory that a woman just because she has worked outside the home for money is any more able to do it than one who has not, or is any more called upon to sacrifice her home and happiness than one who has lived the "sheltered life", is a fallacy which ought not to be accepted by the very women whom it is designed to protect. And it will not be by those who have the right spirit of fairness and patriotism, nor pleaded by the man who is not afraid to offer himself and his life to the service of his country.

By order of the commandant at the Great Lakes naval training station a detachment of twenty-five from the famous jackie band will be assigned to play at every session of the convention. The Chicago Methodist Preachers' quartet will also contribute to the musical program at the Rally on both days. Convention singing will be led by E. O. Excell with Alvin W. Roper at the piano.
