Building—The Panacea

The injunction to the public is to build. Building is recognized as the panacea for the unemployed, the dissatisfaction and the delay of which the men in the service complain so bitterly, because the opening of a new drive in building operations means the booming of all other trades as well.

The fact that labor and raw materials must now be bought at a figure that weighs a building down with an investment cost that forever beggars it as a producer of legitimate income seems not to have entered into the calculations of those who are hymning the refrain, Build, Build, Build. Every thing is at hand for building. Timber, steel, cement, plumbing materials, men, everything is to be had, but at a price which discourages the man who has to consider what he puts into the bricks and stones of the structure in which he is to do business or to produce his home.

And yet the public can recognize the patent fact that building is the basic thing in the reorganization of industry on a peace basis. A contract let for the erection of a building automatically releases other contracts for other supplies,—steel, cement, plumbing, lumber, bricks, and so on and so on. Anybody will agree that the way to start the era of prosperity that requires only a start to be realized, is to begin, and yet few are in a position to sacrifice their financial interest upon the altar of the national prosperity. The way seems to lie first through the carrying forward of plans for public building, and through that means into the realm of private enterprise which will follow as fast as the resumption of something like pre-war prices is attained.

Stomach Trouble

Edna, four, was going next door to her auntie. She was told by her mother not to eat anything while there as her stomach was upset. When she came in she said, "Auntie, mamma said I shouldn't eat anything because my stomach has tipped over."
