Fourth of July, a Year Ago, Was Big Day for Arthur R. Meyers at Corbie, France

Arthur R. Meyers, Company F, 131st Infantry, of the 33rd Prairie division, who saw service on the front lines and who was recently discharged from the service, spent a quite and serene Fourth of July in Wilmette. He found ample time for a bit of retrospection and his thoughts carried him back to the thrilling events of a year ago and the Fourth of July of 1918 when he participated in a very grim and extremely serious "fire-works display" at Corbie, France. He tells briefly of his experiences on that day. You will be interested to hear the simple and modest account of one of the fiercest engagements of the last year of the war at the time when America began to assert herself in turning the tide of battle against the Hun invaders.

Meyers was formerly assistant professional at the North Shore Golf club and has many friends on the north shore. He resides in Wilmette, Illinois, July 1, 1919.

Well—Here it is a year since the regiment had its initial experience in going over the top. On July 4, 1918, two companies of our regiment, the 131st infantry, together with two companies of the 132nd, received orders from the British Second Army headquarters on June 29 to proceed to the lines held by the Australians in front of Hamel. The balance of the regiment followed the next day.

After hiking for eight hours we pitched tents in an old orchard getting up at five o'clock in the morning for a light breakfast and an early resumption of the journey. After being on the road until noon we finally arrived at our destination, the reserve trenches.

The Australian regimental commander met us there. He was in shirt sleeves and we did not at first recognize him.

The colonel told us what to do and what not to do and then excused us for the day with the order that we intrench ourselves for the night. We were entrenched on a hillside.

We were on the outskirts of a shell-torn village and on this day the Germans shelled the vicinity heavily. Ordinarily the enemy threw only a few shells into a devastated town in the course of a week. The colonel had objected to the manner of procedure employed in bringing the men up to the lines as a half-platoon was taken up at a time instead of two squads as was customary. Taking men in comparatively large groups he characterized as suicide.

Everything was alright on the evening of July 1 and the following morning and afternoon. Toward evening the men were called together and everything explained pertaining to our removal to the immediate reserve on the other side of the road a mile nearer the front lines.

At eleven o'clock that night a lieutenant from the Australian forces came over for three of the men of our company for duty as a carrying detail to transport barbed wire to the front line trench. We had carried this wire to the support trench after dark that evening.

The corporal in charge of the Americans, (there were only ten of us attached to the Australian company), ordered me to select two other men to accompany me as the detail.

The shells were commencing to fall with some degree of regularity now and, after advancing some distance, we could gauge our proximity to the front line by the direction of the shelling.

Our party became lost that night and passed over into No Man's Land before we were aware of our predicament. The place of our crossing over was a connecting trench between the front and support trenches.

After getting our bearings our mission was soon fulfilled and at three o'clock in the morning of July 3 we were back at our former position. We had carried 100 rolls of wire and many posts in approximately three hours.

At ten o'clock that morning we received orders to pack up and were taken out of line. Company E and C were already up in the front line so they remained through the "push" and joined the regiment later.

The men left the trench two at a time a distance of fifty yards apart so as to avoid the possibility of heavy casualties. The company formed in the woods about two miles to the rear and proceeded back to Allenville passing through Corbie, a city about the size of Evanston, the battalion headquarters. A corporal and I were ordered to remain here at headquarters.

Our equipment, had we remained in the lines on July 4, would have consisted of our light packs, a shovel or pick mattock, two bandoliers of ammunition besides the hundred rounds carried in our belts, three sugar bags to be used for "revetments" in digging in, three hand grenades, carried in our pockets. Besides carrying a rifle each man was to take a roll of barbed wire or a post.

At five-thirty o'clock the men "hopped off" alright there being a bombardment on since early in the morning.

Companies C and E had quite a few casualties. Eight large guns were placed in the woods near the chateau which served as headquarters. They were placed at intervals within a hundred yard radius of the chateau. They were soon barking and maintained a continuous pounding until seven in the morning. At about 8 o'clock prisoners started coming in—about 1000 were taken during the early morning hours—and marched through Corbie to another town where a prison cage had been erected.

The prisoners believed the Americans were actually Australian troops wearing the American uniform. It took some convincing argument to disillusion them.

Corbie was reduced to ruins during the battle. Two buildings survived the bombardment. One was the chateau headquarters. The other was a church about fifty yards distant, being used for observation purposes by the German artillery.

Arthur R. Meyers, Company F, 131st Infantry, 33d (Prairie) Division.

WILMETTE AFTER EIGHTH VICTORY SUNDAY; WINNETKANS TO BE VICTIMS

Several weeks ago Wilmette took a trip to Winnetka and proved to a large crowd of on-lookers that Winnetka couldn't defeat them when they captured the battle 11 to 2. Now the Winnetkans claim that Wilmette will be handed a dose of the same medicine Sunday afternoon at the Wilmette diamond, while their indebted victims claim that Winnetka will suffer its second defeat at their hands. The rivalry is keen and no doubt the Winnetkans will bring a loyal crowd along to help them win but if Wilmette turns out in a body to see the game how is Winnetka going to win inasmuch as Wilmette can boast a better percentage of victories over a harder class of teams?

Winnetka has a good team, a good battery and Wilmette has the same. The infields and outfields are composed of the good players with a desire to win on the diamond. Knox and Kloefer will hurl and receive for Winnetka while either Raap, Boore or Boesch will toss the pill for Wilmette while Bell Robinson officiates behind the bat.
