KENILWORTH POLICEMAN

CATCHES BURGLAR TRIO

Clement Ley, motorcycle policeman for Kenilworth, while riding on Sheridan road Wednesday night captured three burglars attempting to force entrance into a fruit and ice cream stand on the lake front at Sheridan road and Chestnut street. The men were given a hearing Thursday morning and later confined in the County jail to await hearing before the grand jury.

The confectionery stand is conducted by M. L. Sparr, manager of the Village theater.

IN MEMORY OF DINSMORE ELY

A remarkable book, made up of the diary and letters of one of the Winnetka men who gave their lives in the great war, has recently been published by A. McClurg in Chicago. It is called "Dinsmore Ely, one who Served."

Through reading this book one comes to love and honor the boy who wrote it. There is the spirit of pure American enjoyment of living, combined with a lofty idealism that makes it ring true throughout.

Dinsmore Ely was the son of Dr. and Mrs. James O. Ely of Winnetka, and was killed while flying over the Montdidier sector in France.

One sees Dinsmore as he starts out on board ship in New York. He describes his whole trip in detail; the seeing of spouting whales and mistaking them for submarines; the passing through the danger zone with its stray crates and spars and carcasses of horses from wrecked ships; the sighting of a real submarine, and the zigzagging out of its path; and finally landing in France.

He then tells of his joining the Lafayette Flying Corps of the French Foreign Legion, and of his training for aviation. His descriptions of trips in the air are vivid and fascinating. Here is an extract from a description of his first trip:

"Sitting in the long, dragon-fly body, there was a moment to think. Then the pilot gave the signal for the blocks to be taken away, and like some animal the machine snorted and quivered as if unable to realize it was released. Then there was a bound; a crashing roar of wind passed my helmet; a blur of ground as we sped along the turf; and then suddenly the vibration stopped. The ground flew away beneath, and we mounted. I had thought to see things diminish gradually, but the earth fell away. We skimmed a grove of trees. I glanced up at the pilot to see how he controlled, and when I looked down again I noticed a team of white flies drawing a match along a crayon mark. It was a team of horses on a country road. Then the sense of speed was lost and we seemed to be drifting along like a cloud."

Page after page of letters and extracts from his diary show his life in France as those of us who had to stay home have longed to know it. One lives there with him. One goes through the cathedrals and shops; visits Paris and the little villages; rides through the clouds; goes to the hospital with bronchitis; enjoys the candy sent from home and his French godmother.

When he writes to his young brother, Robert, to whose education he dedicated his insurance, one realizes something of Dinsmore's cleanness of mind and body. In one letter to Bob he says, for instance:

"Vulgar stories will keep you from becoming a strong man; once in a while you cannot help listening to them; never remember one, never tell one under any condition, and people will learn to know you as a boy with a clean mind. Liquor will keep you from having a happy home; never touch it. Smoking will keep you from being as strong and healthy as God meant you to be. . . . Swear if you must, smoke if you want to after you are a man, but for goodness sake, do not do it in order to be a man or because other boys do it. If you cannot be a man without it, you can't be a man with it. . . . If every American has to return to the United States and start producing, raising, and training soldiers for the next fifty years to beat the German, we'll thrash them, by God, if it leaves America a desert and Germany a hole in the ground."

Before he went aloft for his final flight he seems to have had some premonition of the fate that awaited him. He had been up in a balloon a few days before in the silence and emptiness of the upper air. He says: "I had never realized the air was so empty and so still. . . . As the sun began to rise and the mist clear, the firing became intermittent, and finally ceased, and the appalling silence seemed to bear us skyward with its pressure. I shivered. I wonder if the soul shivers as it leaves the earth in search of peace. I think I should prefer to have my soul stay down in the warm earth with my body and the kindly reaching roots and flowers and all the ants and friendly worms than float up in the everlasting silence."

And then he ends his letter with this: "And I want to say in closing, if anything should happen to me, let's have no mourning in spirit or in dress. Like a Liberty Bond, it is an investment, not a loss, when a man dies for his country. It is an honor to a family, and is that the time for weeping? I would rather leave my family rich in pleasant memories of my life than mired in sorrow at my death."

Glidden Tour Revived. The American Automobile association has authorized a transcontinental Glidden tour for the summer of 1920. Charles J. Glidden, who in the early days of motoring sponsored this run annually, will be the donor of the cup again in 1920.

Be Sure to Say "Threaded Rubber"

If everybody said "Threaded Rubber Insulation" when they bought batteries and saw to it that "Threaded Rubber" was what they got there would be a lot less battery grief.

—Far fewer jobs of re-insulation that is so often necessary to get full life out of the plates of an ordinary battery.

—Assurance of longer battery life.

If your battery is getting to the point where it shows signs of quitting it will pay you to get on the track of Threaded Rubber. Come in any time and have a talk about batteries.
