Lieut. Roswell Hayes Fuller Buried by Germans at Brandeville, Mother Told

Mrs. Frank Fuller, 362 Hawthorne lane, has at last, after nearly a year of waiting, received authentic news of her son's fate and of his last mission. This information came in part from his comrade Lieutenant Henry D. Lindsley who was also his roommate at Yale and who was himself missing, injured, and rescued from No Man's Land with concussion of the brain which lasted some weeks. Another source was a fellow officer, Lieutenant d'Olive, who was twice decorated.

Lieutenant Roswell Hayes Fuller, in the First Pursuit Group of the 93rd Aero Squadron, fought through the St. Mihiel, where the aviators were of necessity greatly overworked, and where their losses were extremely heavy. Shortly after, and without time for rest from the nerve strain, they were moved up to Vaucouleurs near Verdun, and realized that they were in for another great drive.

Battles Enemy Squadron

On the day before the Argonne-Meuse attack, it became necessary for the American command to know by which of two roads the Germans were coming out of Metz. These roads ran side by side for a certain distance, and then diverged widely under cover, so that it was impossible to get the information by aerial photograph. The only way to secure it was to send aviators down low to see with the naked eye. Lieut. Fuller and Lieut. Rumpf (since dead) were the first to volunteer, and made the journey of nearly one hundred miles over enemy territory. They secured their information, and when they were attacked both from the air and the ground, Lieut. Fuller gave his companion a signal to fly for France with the news, and he himself engaged the entire formation. When last seen he was circling in a duel with three enemy planes, with others coming to the attack.

The War Department has, without success, made every effort possible to discover his fate, and the Red Cross has made a special search through every hospital and prison in Germany.

Message Long Delayed

Mrs. Fuller has recently, however, received a letter from a lieutenant of Field Artillery in France, addressed to the friends of Roswell H. Fuller, Madison avenue, New York City. This fell into the hands of a group of studio workers where there was a young girl named Winifred Fuller. She happened to be absent the day the letter arrived, and a friend opened it and recognized the name as that of a missing American Aviator who had friends in Ossining, New York, and so she sent it on to them, and after passing through six different hands it reached Winnetka. The French lieutenant wrote that he had been recently stationed in Italy and while there had met an Italian who was brigaded with the Austrians near Metz, and that on September 30, 1918, he had been present at the funeral of a young American aviator who was shot in battle by the Germans and buried by them with full military honors in the cemetery at Brandeville. He also mentioned that his papers were turned over to the military authorities at that place and that his name was Roswell H. Fuller.

The young lieutenant who went so far out of his way to do an act of great kindness, wrote in concluding: "This letter may be of no special service, but if by any chance I should be of use in bringing new information to the friends of one who has made the supreme sacrifice for his country, I shall consider myself highly rewarded for this slight effort."

In the afternoon before a large gathering of fans Wood played Carpenter and won on the 16th green by 3 and 2. The cup becomes the personal property of the winner. Carpenter, as runner-up, received a five dollar merchandise certificate as a special prize.

This will be open to subscribers to the Golfers Magazine only and will be played for on August 31. It will be 18 holes handicap medal play, all handicaps to be based on the average of scores turned in this year by the players.

Home-Economy Expert Gives Housewives Advice and Solution of Home Problems

Editor's Note:—Mrs. Frank D. Fulton of Winnetka, originator of the "Conservation Clothesline," and speaker for the National Council of Defense, is writing a series of articles on the subject of the Household Economics and the proper solution of problems of house keeping.

The following is the beginning of a series of articles which will appear from time to time in the columns of this paper:

By Mrs. Frank D. Fulton

The greatest problem in relation to the operation of the home is obtaining some one to assist the housewife in doing the necessary work. Inability to obtain assistance is not because of lack of compensation nor of proper working conditions.

There are plenty of women who would be glad to work in the home if it were not for the social strata to which they are relegated. Many excellent cooks are working in stores, shops, factories and offices because of the accepted difference in social position between girls who work in such places and girls who work in homes.

Work in the home should be classified as the highest form of employment. Nothing is more important. It is where we raise our children, prepare our food, make our clothes, and where we sleep, and it is the place where the mother and children spend substantially all of their time.

The making and maintenance of the home is the principal object of all men and women. The wife is responsible for the conduct of the home, the same as the husband is responsible for the conduct of his business.

Home Manager To Blame

The husband has no difficulty in getting assistants in his office, and these assistants cost him much less than the wife pays for assistance in the home, yet it is impossible for the wife to get some one to help her in the home. The reason for shortage of help in the home is chargeable, in most instances, to the manager of the home.

The man occupies a position of authority, as a rule, because of his ability to direct others. The wife is placed in charge of the home for other reasons, with the result that the foreman of the house knows less about its management and the work to be done than the employee who is assisting.

The work in a modern house, with all our conveniences, is a pleasure and not a hardship.

The cook, whether she be the housewife or helper, has her own private bath and pleasant sleeping quarters; she can turn a knob and light the gas range instead of having to build a kitchen fire; she pushes a button and the irons on the stove and walking to and from the stove to the ironing board as the iron becomes cool.

She presses a button and cleans the house with a vacuum cleaner instead of the old-fashioned broom; she has an electric washing machine and mangle instead of the old-fashioned washboard and washtub, and she has many other devices to assist in saving time and labor. If, with these facilities, the work is done in a methodical and intelligent manner, it will not be burdensome.

The husband has done his part by contributing to the modern home the facilities mentioned, and the solving of the problem of how to operate the home is squarely up to the wife. To solve this problem satisfactorily she must learn to do the work in the home and in addition learn how to intelligently direct others.

Many women can prepare excellent meals, but they cannot properly direct the cook, and they will not let the cook prepare the meal without direction. In many instances too many cooks not only spoil the broth but they spoil the whole meal.

"Must Educate Ourselves"

I suggest that in trying to solve the problem of assisting in the home we start by educating ourselves. We must learn to look at old-fashioned housework from a different viewpoint. We do not hear the successful business man talking about how he abhors and hates his work, or wishes he could leave it, but we do hear these expressions from many women in charge of homes.

The successful business man, if he discusses his business, will tell you how much he enjoys his work, and how prosperous his business is, and what competent employes he has, and if the women would take the same attitude toward their home work it would aid somewhat in solving our problem. We ought to consider our work as being on as high a level as the work of our husbands. We ought to consider that our employes and co-laborers rank as high as the employes and co-laborers employed by our husbands.

Use Business Methods

We must run our homes on a business basis and use business methods. The business man has his work systematized. He knows each day when he goes to the office exactly what he is going to do. We should put our household upon a business basis, and we should have definite plans for each day. We should have a schedule, and this schedule should be in writing.

Do not stand around and dictate after you have made your plans. When you have made your plans for the day, if your helper finishes the work quickly, do not add something to the schedule merely for the purpose of keeping her busy. If your helper knows at the start of the day exactly what is to be done, and also knows that if she does that work quickly and efficiently she will not be called

A royal welcome was extended to Col. H. J. Reilly, of Winnetka, commander of the famous "Reilly's Bucks," when he addressed the Dumasq Spencer Post of the American Legion Wednesday evening, August 13, at the Highland Park Army and Navy Center. Col. Reilly said it was the duty of every true American to study American problems from the standpoint of their merits instead of making them the melting pot of politics. While a man may have been a good soldier in military life he should be a like soldier in his citizenship whether national, state or local.

You Can Buy Food From Uncle Sam, By Ordering Through Winnetka Postmaster

Hundreds of Winnetka's housewives this week availed themselves of the opportunity to purchase foodstuffs offered for sale by the government through the local post office. The general rush of patrons has considerably depleted the stock of commodities allotted to the Village, according to postal authorities here who state, however, that there is still much on hand, awaiting orders from prospective purchasers.

A list of some of the commodities has been prepared by the Winnetka Weekly Talk in conjunction with the postal authorities. The list represents the original complete stock.
