America's Dead

Every American heart is saddened by the thought of the nearly seventy thousands graves in which American soldiers lie in France. Seventy thousand young men taken from life in their very prime is a sad experience for a nation, and America mourns her soldier dead with a sincere sense of heavy loss.

For about eighteen months men in the American uniform were brought to face the German guns. Everything that could be done to make them safe in their dangerous work was done, but seventy thousand of them paid with their lives for the upholding of the national honor and the Village Hall.
