As To Senator Harding

The surprise of the nomination of Senator Warren G. Harding is beginning to turn to interest in what the man represents, what he has done, what sort of qualifications he has for the discharge of the duties of the president of the United States. Although the public has had more or less acquaintance with the name of the senator from Ohio, exact facts have not been fixed in mind and a real appreciation of the significance of the choice of the republican convention is rather too generally lacking.

The following excerpt from an open letter from Frank A. Munsey, owner and publisher of a string of newspapers and magazines, is interesting in that it throws a little light upon the career of Senator Harding and outlines in a general way the character of the man into whose hands the destiny of the republican party has been placed and, perhaps, that of the whole nation, after the campaign shall have been fought out and the election returns made known.

Mr. Munsey says:

"Following him all the way up from the farm, through childhood, young manhood; seeing him as a printer at the case after he had finished his education; seeing him as the venturesome young editor-owner of a small country newspaper—daring to put himself to the test in one of the most difficult of all fields of endeavor and winning success; seeing that small country newspaper grow under his wise and vigorous handling into a prosperous and influential journal that has made him financially independent; seeing him as a representative and later as a senator in the legislature of Ohio; seeing him as lieutenant-governor of his state and then as United States senator from Ohio, and now as the candidate of the republican party for the presidency—the highest honor a party can bestow on a man—all this spells something, means something. Men do not pick up records of this sort in the street. They do not come by accident. There is merit in the man who achieves as Senator Harding has achieved.

"Senator Harding is not a genius. If he were a genius he wouldn't be level headed. Geniuses are never level headed. He is, however, better than a genius for an administrative job, because he is a practical man of common sense.

"So far Senator Harding has not startled the world by anything he has done or said in the United States Senate. He has made a fine record in that body as a sound, safe man, who thinks well, talks well and has the courage of his convictions. As a matter of fact, Senator Harding has taken quite as conspicuous a place in the United States senate as any man well can take in his first term in that body. The senator who projects himself into the foreground and essays to be a leader and a maker of public opinion in his first term, as a rule talks to empty benches and strews stumbling blocks in his own path.

"An examination of Senator Harding's work in committee and on the floor and an examination of his speeches and general bearing as a first term senator show admirably in his favor. Senator Harding is the first republican senator in all our history to receive the nomination for president. It is clear that he could never have had the indorsement of his fellow senators for the great office of president if he were not equal to the job."

Hot Weather Hints

Hot weather hints are certainly timely. Advice about food and daily habits of living is entirely to the point.

It is well for the human being to remember that the human body is constructed much after the plan of any power machine. It requires fuel to run it and best results are obtained only when the proportion of fuel is governed by the amount of work that is being done.

Food in the summer should be carefully considered. There should be enough to maintain efficiency but none to be left over to keep the body hot. We need no storage of fat to keep us comfortable and fat is the natural result of a consumption of food beyond the needs of the body for the energy that is required to maintain its functions and to perform the work that has to be done.

Nature has provided the green vegetables and a distaste for the heavy and heating foods. It is the wise man or woman who heeds the warning and accepts the provisions that have been made for our comfort.

NOT INTERESTED

Property owners along Euclid avenue advised the village council Tuesday evening of their unwillingness to pay for proposed paving of the short length of the street between Winnetka and Glencoe. This portion of the street, they contended, benefits only through traffic and is of no particular value to the property owners. The proposition of paving was postponed by the council.

REFLECTED in the Oakland Sensible Six Sedan now on view in our sales-room, is the purpose of Oakland engineers to build cars of utmost utility and value.

This purpose governs the design of each feature and the methods by which all features are related to each other.

Inspect the deep frame, the sturdy axles, the efficient engine, the well-knit body, and note how these carry out this policy.

Note that strength is placed where strength is needed, and that weight is eliminated wherever it is superfluous and a hindrance.

Note that the combination of high power and scientific lightweight construction produces exceptional transportation at low cost.

For these reasons the Oakland Sedan, now mounted on a stronger chassis of longer wheelbase, more than ever is a good car to own because it is a good car to use.
