The Public Market

The establishment of the public market may help those who are able to patronize it to save a few dollars on the monthly grocery bills. Lower prices will prevail, materially, lower prices, because there is no rent to be paid by the farmers who sell their produce, no delivery service, no loss to stand from bad accounts, no long-term credit customers to carry.

The public market offers a correction of existing evils in the distribution of food materials, but it also offers possibilities of infliction of injustice upon the grocers who cannot escape being adversely affected by the direct sale of articles which constitute a part of their stock in trade for a short season. The public market cannot take the place of the established grocery store in the lives of the people of the community because of its limited service, its temporary character and its lack of affiliation with the community as a municipality. There can be no sense of obligation to observe the welfare of the community where their is no community to interest, except the exchange of a few fresh vegetables for the money of a few of the people.

Peter N. Jans is manager of the Oakland-Phillips Company. He is active in fields outside the automobile business, as director of the Evanston Municipal Golf course, and a leader of other community interests.

The Hospital Annex

The very great need for greater hospital space in recent winters impresses upon the general north shore public the importance of having the new Evanston hospital annex completed before the grip and influenza season opens. The promise that it will be ready for occupancy by December first affords a satisfaction to those who recognize the community value of a hospital such as ours that cannot be measured by the need that they individually feel for it.

Few people realize what an insurance against tragedy the presence of a well equipped hospital near at hand affords. Not until the emergency comes does the average person recognize how unconsciously he has placed his dependence upon the hospital. That the institution will be much more adequate to the demands that are made upon it, that there will be fewer chances of disappointing those who have emergency need for hospital service should be a source of satisfaction to the whole general public.
