Suffrage A Fact

Secretary of State Colby has signed a proclamation of the Nineteenth amendment to the constitution.

It appears that a group of suffrage workers from the headquarters of the National Woman's party who had gathered at the state department were disappointed, as they had hoped to be present when the secretary of state attached his signature to the proclamation. They keenly desired to make something of a ceremony out of the happy ending of a bitter fight.

That they should want to hold a jubilation is a natural consequence. The women who have given so much of their energies and, indeed, lives that suffrage might be an accomplished fact, can feel that it has been worth the effort and sacrifice.

The average citizens, male and female, will be pleased to learn that suffrage is universal. It will mean an end of petitioning, pleading and picketing. It will mean that the women will take the position which is rightfully theirs and which should have been theirs for the mere asking years ago.

One cannot expect too much from the women at first. They must get used to their unencumbered franchise. They have fought so long and their goal has always been a little beyond their reach that they have not had time to think how they would exercise the right to vote. If it should happen that the made a few mistakes with their ballots, it would not be strange. They could rightly say that if they had been given the right example, all would have been well.

Suffrage marks a new era in our national life and Secretary Colby very properly put it when he said: "I confidently believe that every salutary, forward and upward force in our public life will receive fresh vigor and reinforcement from the enfranchisement of the women of America."

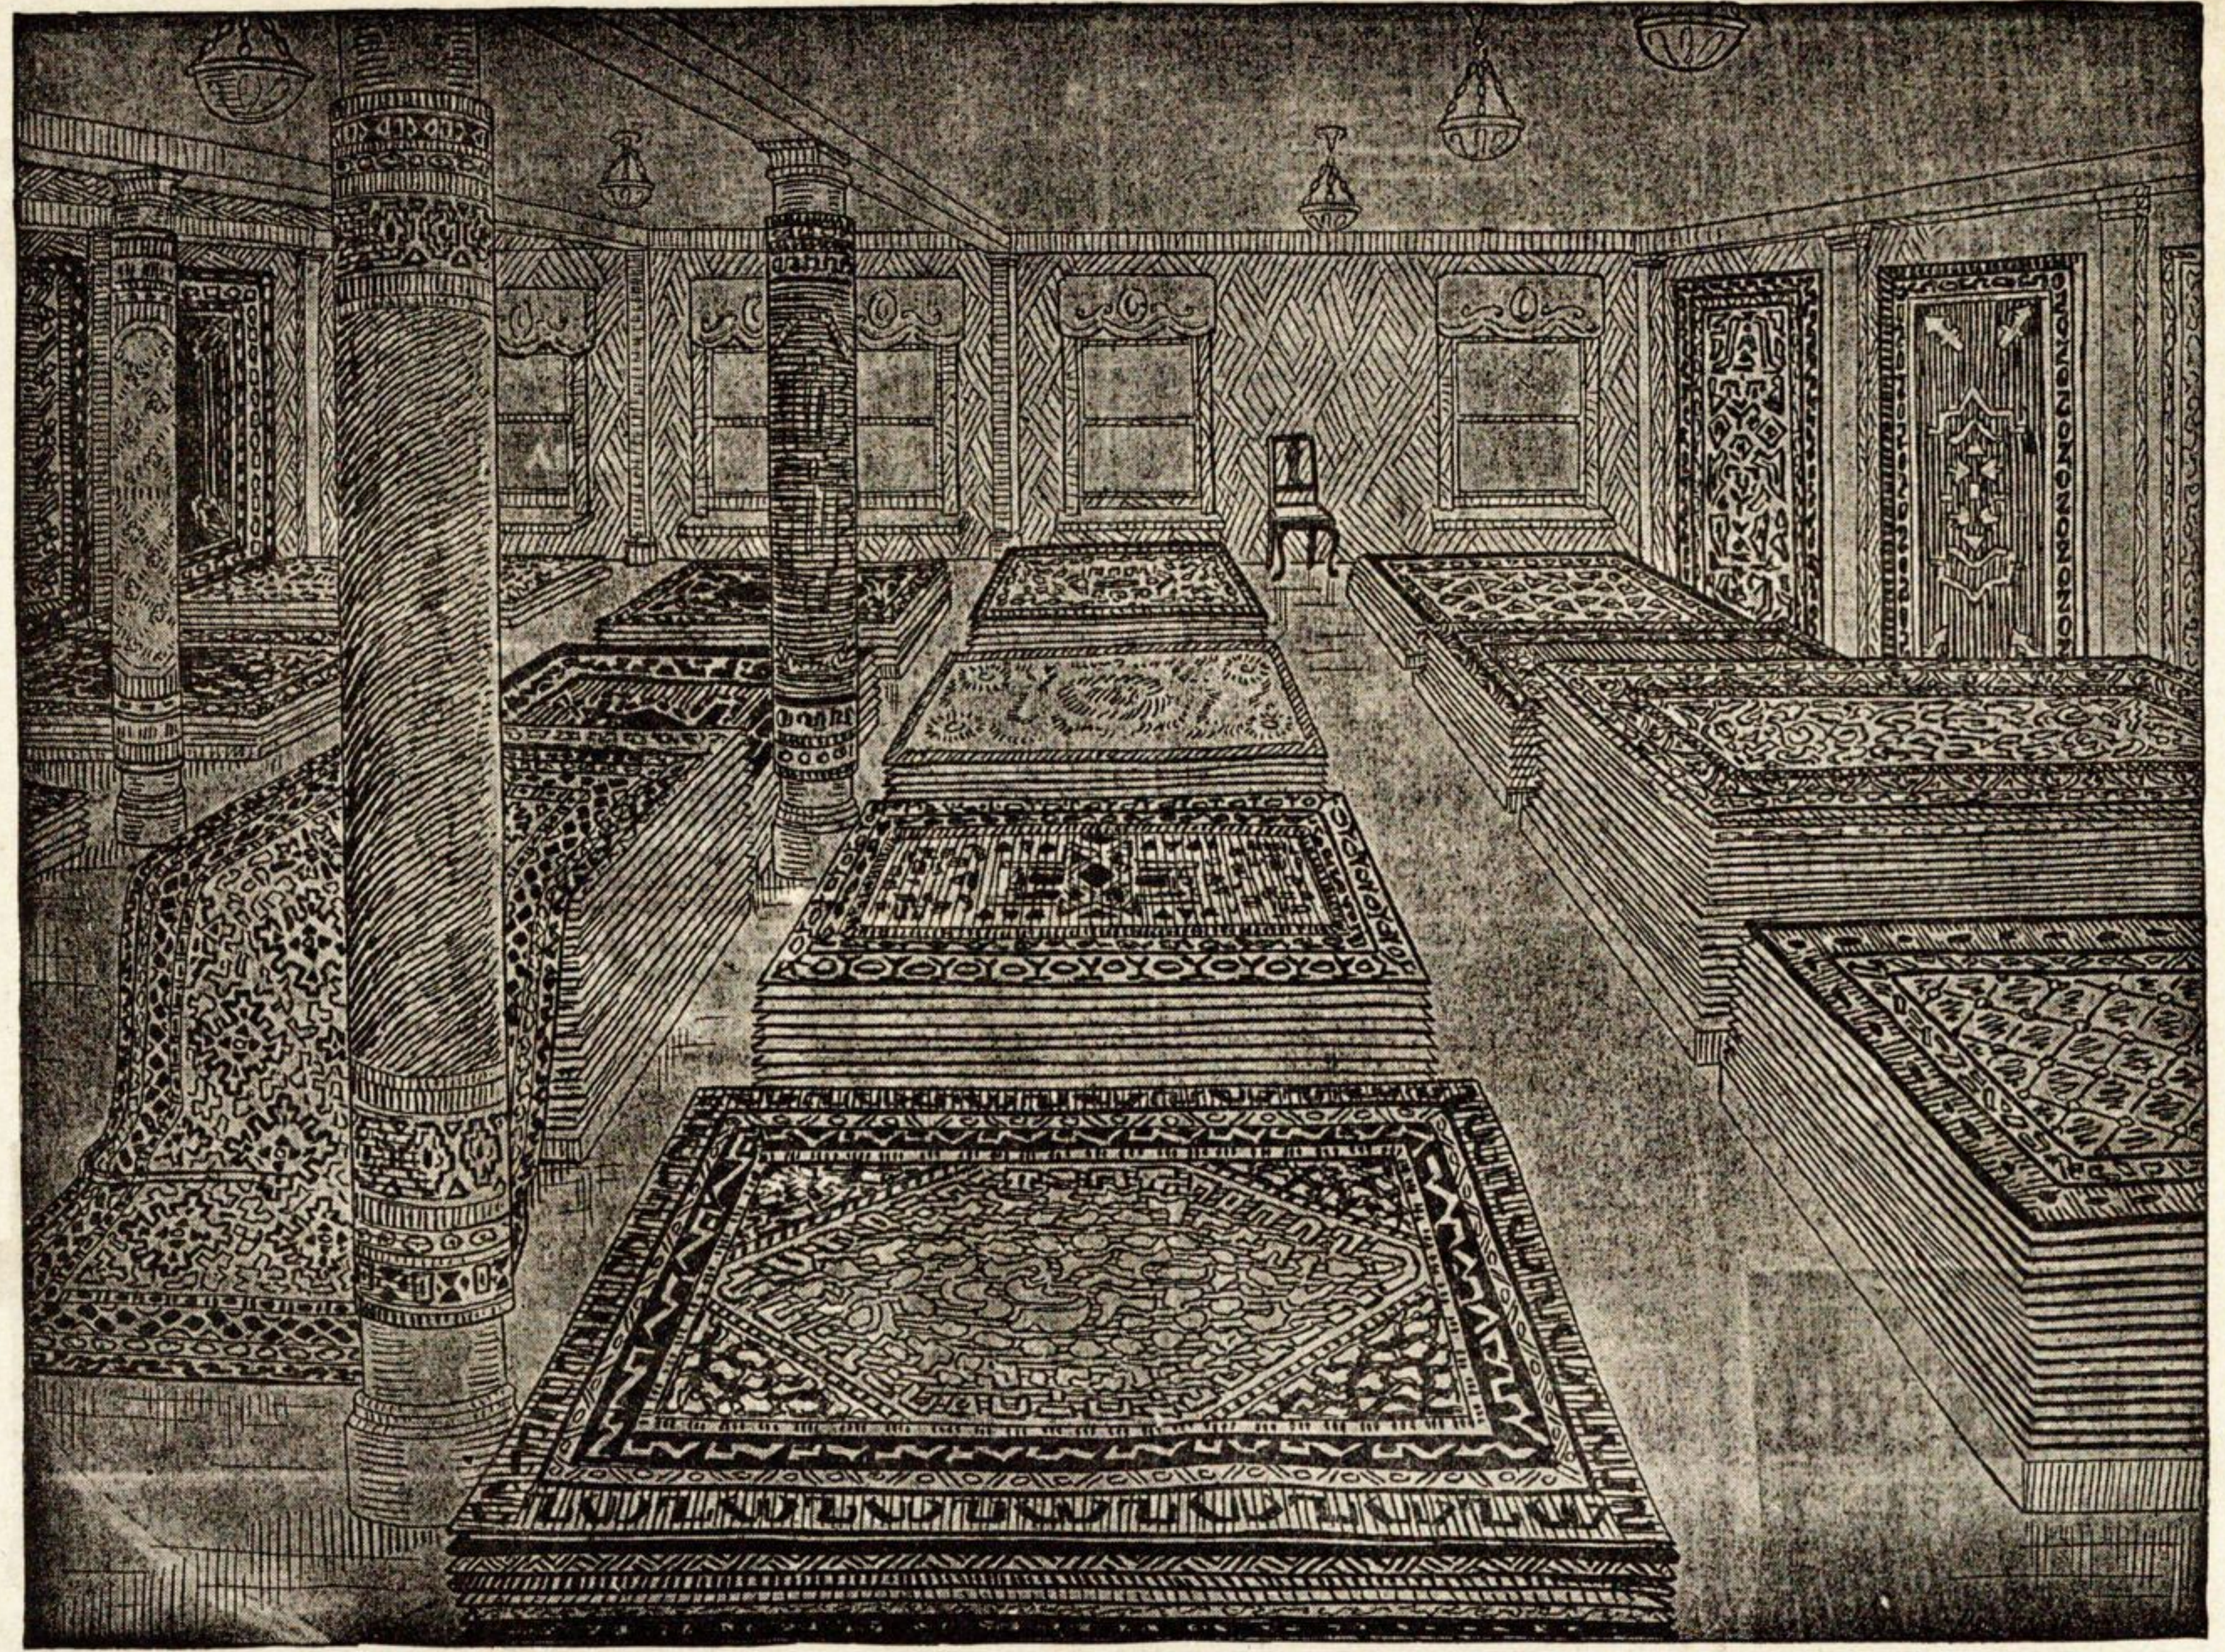

Get After Them

The dandelion, the barberry, and now the Canadian thistle are recommended to the general public for destruction because of their bad influence upon other and more desirable forms of vegetation.

For this year the time to fight the dandelion has passed. The barberry has done what harm it can do to the wheat for this season. But the thistle is just ready to disseminate its seeds and to insure a yet more vigorous crop next year. This is the time to give attention to that pest to secure results.

URGES A FOREST POLICY

Importance of the forests to our economic life and the need of a national forest policy are shown when we consider the wood-using industries of the country and money involved, writes P. S. Ridsdale in the National Property Owner (N. Y.) In Ohio, Indiana and Illinois a billion board feet of lumber was produced by each state in 1899, but twenty years later this production had dropped to about one quarter of that amount. What this means in increased freight charges is easily seen. So alarming has become the situation that the newspapers of the American Forestry Association of Washington and told the wood-using industries of the middle West they have to move or quit in thirty years.

A Sale of Oriental Rugs

The most unusual sale of Oriental Rugs which has ever been held in Evanston will begin tomorrow morning.

Unusual in two respects—

The entire selection is included and it is a very choice one. It contains rare specimens, the equals of which can not be found elsewhere, many of them having just been brought over from the Orient for us.

The original prices, which were very reasonable, have been lowered from 10% to 35%. To fully realize just what a saving this is, it is necessary to do but a bit of simple figuring. These figures are convincing.

Dreams Can Be Realized Tomorrow

Many of us form the habit of dreaming about the lovely things we'd like to possess, and in the dreaming forget to make the dreams come true.

If you long for Oriental Rugs, if they are the "stuff" of your dreams, it is our judgment a no more propitious moment will ever present itself for the beginning of your collection. It can be started tomorrow without the tremendous outlay which you thought necessary.

The lists here will substantiate this statement.
