The Promised New League

The Versailles League of Nations is dead, according to the President-elect, but the new administration intends to see that the United States plays its part in the new association of nations that will be formed. In other words, the league is dead and a league is to be evolved that will express to the rest of the world the willingness of America to undertake its just part in protection of the peace of the world, but in accordance with its own constitution and its own judgment of what is just and right. That is the meaning of the election returns—the wish of the people of the United States to preserve the independence of the nation in its association with other nations and to make the obligations of the United States accord with the policies that have been operative since the founding of the nation.

To effect an association of nations such as President-elect Harding promises will require the best efforts of the best statesmanship in the nation. It calls for the deepest knowledge of international law that can be put at the disposal of the President in the new administration. It requires the fullest knowledge to be had upon conditions in Europe, political, diplomatic, social and the individual characteristics of the various peoples who will be affected by the conditions of a league such as is planned.

The experiment of a one-man determination of the responsibility of the nation has been tried out, to the complete satisfaction of everybody that it doesn't work in this country of representative government. That experiment has been an expensive one for the United States and it ought to be made to serve a useful purpose in pointing dangers in the way of a new administration. It should be made a guide in what not to do to the President-elect, even before he enters upon the duties of the high office for which he has been chosen.

It rests with the new administration to set the American people right in the estimation of the world, to correct the wrong impression that has been made by the refusal of the Congress to ratify the acts of the President. It is in the hands of the new Congress and the new executive head to prove to the other nations of the world that the United States as a whole is possessed of the same quality of ideals as to the responsibility of the great nations of the world to protect the weak, and of the obligation to establish some machinery by which the peace that has been won at such great cost shall not be sacrificed for such cause as sent the world into war in 1914.

The program for the early part of the next administration is not likely to be easy to carry out, even after it is framed, which in itself will not be simple. But it can be done and must be done, whatever the cost in work and time and the sacrifice of personal ambitions and ideas of what is expedient. A common ground must be found upon which the whole United States government may stand and the other nations of the world meet this country with mutual respect, trust and regard. Nothing else can redeem this country in the eyes of the people of the European countries who have been subjected to a systematic education in the matter of the failure of the United States to measure up to the high opinion that had been developed because of the part that this country took in the defeat of the German kaiser and his war machine.

Christmas Cards With Personality

Christmas Cards can be—just cards; a stereotyped conventionality; a substitute for the puzzling Christmas gift. Or they can be a really thoughtful remembrance—the reflection of a personality—as individual and distinctive as the one who sends them.

As cordial as a handclasp, as cheery and heart-warming as a spoken word of greeting, are the personal Christmas cards designed by McClurg's. Drop in and look them over. You would hardly realize that there are so many attractive ways of saying "Merry Christmas!"

The stamp of "McClurg" on any piece of engraving is always proof of correctness of detail. On your card of greeting it is the mark of individuality that will definitely distinguish your good wishes from all the others.

Wish for a Franklin

YES

This picture looks like first grade work

BUT

If you will recall when you were in first grade you got your first real knowledge and information on many subjects.

NOW

You are getting the fundamental principle of Franklin cars--Ease of riding. The picture means something--The worst roads are smoothed out for you if you drive a Franklin. Why? SPRINGS full elliptic--FRAME wooden laminations--TIRES oversize and carrying only 45 pounds of air.

Hit a Pillow with your double fist, then hit a brick wall and you will understand the difference. Jump off a table stiff legged and then jump off and feel your knees bend. The pillow and the bend in the knee take the shock. Less unsprung weight is the answer.
