From Columbus, Wis., comes a story of how members of Lange-Ostrander Post of the American Legion aided a member of the post when his blacksmith shop was destroyed by fire. Twenty-four hours after the fire, post members met and voted unanimously to help their buddy rebuild the shop. Legion doctors, dentists, lawyers, merchants and trade union members worked for three days, under the direction of carpenter members of the post, and the result was a much better establishment for the unfortunate ex-service man. During the progress of the work, a local bakery provided the toilers with food.

The click of the bones was heard in the headquarters of the New Orleans American Legion Employment and Service bureau.

"Up, little Joe; get your papa that job!" The dice rolled noisily on the cement floor.

There are so many more men than jobs that the choice between veterans with similar qualifications had to be entrusted to the ivory cubes, the Legion officials explained.
