SCHOOL PROBLEMS

By Supt. Washburne

Note: This column will be run from time to time hereafter as questions calling for answers are received by the Superintendent of Schools.

Q. If a pupil does not finish his work in a certain subject by the end of the year, will he make his grade?

A. All pupils will normally pass to the next room higher each year regardless of whether or not they have completed their work in all subjects. They will not, however, begin the work of the next grade higher in any subject until they have completed the previous grade's work and have received a promotion in that subject. For example, if a fourth grade pupil has not come up to the standard requirements in arithmetic in June, this will not prevent his going on into the fifth grade room. But he will not begin fifth grade arithmetic until he has completed his fourth grade arithmetic work. Grade repetition is impossible under the individual system. But a thorough attainment of each grade's standards in every subject is consistently required.

Q. If a child reads books outside of school, can they be credited as school reading?

A. If the books are included in the book list for any one grade, they may be counted for school work, provided the pupil can pass an examination on the book or make a successful written or oral book report. Books not on the grade list may occasionally be added to it and thereby credited to the pupils who have read them when the teacher has time to make a thorough examination of the book, prepare test questions on it, and determine its literary value.

Q. When a child brings home a white slip saying that he will not complete his work in some subject by the end of the year, what does it mean is going to happen to him?

A. Nothing will happen to him. He will simply have to complete it during the summer or the next fall. The white slips are merely to notify the parents that their children are not making normal progress in some one subject. They are in no sense warnings that the pupil will "fail to make his grade." See answer to the first question above.
