THE PHANTOM SHIP

A lake tragedy failed to materialize Monday when a report that a canoe was floating in the lake off the Water Works led to an examination by the police who found no trace of the derelict craft. It may have been a mirage or a phantom canoe, said one of the policemen with a perchant for the mystic.

Another Story Of Adventure, In. Re. Our Water Gypsy

The little Water Gypsy, with her gay paint of only two weeks ago duller and obscured by the mud and slime of the Desplaines and Illinois rivers, and her sides and bottom dented and chafed by the rocks and ledges of the Fox, came safely to her dock at the Prouty cottage near McHenry at 9 o'clock last Sunday evening, after a twelve-day journey of over two hundred miles from Wilmette to Ottawa, thence up the Fox river to her home.

Mr. Prouty and his eleven year old son are back in Winnetka, as badly battered as their boat, nursing skinned knees and shins, and rubbing cold cream on sunburned arms and backs.

The water in the Desplaines and Illinois was deep and dirty, while that in the Fox was clean and shallow. Both conditions work evil to boating trips. Why Chicago is permitted to send its filth down the Illinois, to poison the principal river of a great commonwealth, is a mystery. The evil increases each year, and is ten times worse now than in 1909, when Mr. Prouty last navigated the stream.

Because of the lack of sufficient water to float even the Gypsy (her Plymoss Mark shows about seven inches) to the foot of any of the big Fox river dams, it became necessary to portage the boat and cargo for long distances—at Carpentersville, for instance, for a quarter of a mile. At many other places the fishways—stairways made to assist finny folks to climb the dams—being dry and out of water, served as inclined planes by means of which the Gypsy, crew and cargo crawled up and over the obstructions. There were sixteen of these cheerful obstacles to be overcome.

Although it clouded up and thundered many times, not a drop of rain fell on the expedition, but within an hour after it reached port the floods descended. Food was plenty and cheap; good, eatable beefsteaks being repeatedly purchased for twenty-five to thirty cents apiece, while eggs were twenty cents a dozen. Everybody met with was friendly and helpful and interested in the voyage, although quite prone to express a mild surprise that any two individuals, apparently sane, should leave a comfortable home in order to eat rough, sleep rougher, and push a row boat up dry cement dams in the hot sun. It does seem queer, but the summer is the season of inconsistency.
