OUR ONLY HOPE

Christianity is the hope of world, the only hope. Without it everything, that, to us, makes life sweet and beautiful and noble would pass away. All that is desirable, in what we call our civilization, would be swept from the face of the earth. The Church is organized Christianity. Surely, there are reasons enough for the most active and faithful support of the church.

Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, ranks among the greatest men who have given luster to our national history. In a great speech in New York City, April 2, 1900, he said: "Upon what conservative element is it that the security and peace of our community depends? Out of what do those maxims of life come that make it decent, that curb passion, that limit selfishness, and that bind men together in common purposes, for the security and happiness of communities? It is, indeed, in and out of this sacred Word of God that a system of morality has come that makes life sweet and gives it possibilities that would otherwise be out of thought."

Farther along in the same address, speaking of the great social and economic difficulties that threaten our civilization, he said: "Agencies of man's devising may alleviate, but they cannot cure, this tendency to division and strife, and substitute for it a drift to peace and unity. Christ in the heart and His gospel of love and ministry in all the activities of life are the only cure . . . Ah! my friends, not scholarship, not invention, not any of these noble and creditable developments of our era—not to these, but to the Word of God and the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ must we turn for hope that men may be delivered from this consuming greed and selfishness."

IRELAND.

The birth of the Irish Free State is an event of significance for outside the bounds of that little island. No country in the world can escape being affected in one way or another by the settlement of the century-old feud between the government of Great Britain and the little part of the great realm which has been so unhappy under the relations imposed upon it. Ireland is a romantic land. Its people appeal to the imagination and enlist the sympathy of a very great proportion of the people of the civilized world. Even those who have thought that the state of mind which has been general in the south of the island has been the result of a sedulous cultivation of a grievance many generations old, have not failed to feel a glow of satisfaction that a way has been found to reconcile the differences between the government of the empire and the revolutionary party of Ireland.

The burden has now been transferred to the head of the Irish patriots to make successful the new organization which they have gained. Ireland must work with a zeal and assiduity not generally characteristic of the race to make their new state a credit to the traditions which they have so jealously cherished. It would, indeed, be a sad anti-climax were failure to follow the long struggle for the recognition of their nationality that has finally been achieved. It remained to be seen whether the enthusiasm of the Irish for their independence was the result of a real longing for self-government, in the name as well as in fact, or resentment incident to the opposition which has been maintained against them. Something worth while must come out of Ireland to justify all the sorrow and suffering that have been endured to afford the opportunity for its growth.

THE HOSPITAL ANNEX

The opening of the doors of the new addition to the Evanston hospital marks the beginning of service to the community for which there has long been need and glad expectation. More and more people are realizing the advantage of hospital care for patients who have fallen victim to serious ailment and are utilizing the institution with its better facilities for care of the sick, with the nurse who has the training which the average home woman does not possess and cannot secure except in the hard school of experience in which the patient pays the always high tuition.

Everything is as it should be in the new hospital annex. There is science and comfort combined, skillful nursing and adequate medical advice and service. The people have to thank the generous citizen who made the hospital possible and themselves that they have added to the fund in sufficient measure to meet the requirements of the high standard for service that has been set and is being maintained.

President Harding is fulfilling, through an enlightened budget system and discriminating economics, the promise of a substantial reduction of Government expenses.

HONOR STUDENTS
 Dorothy Scharf, New Trier High school '20, of Winnetka, is on the Freshman honor list at Northwestern for last year. To have one's name on this list the student must have maintained a very high standard of scholarship for the first year.

Why "Station to Station" Long-Distance Calls Cost You Less

You can save about twenty per cent on your toll bills by using our "Station to Station" long-distance service. To complete a call for a telephone number or for a listed telephone rather than for a particular person requires less time and avoids holding the line at the distant point while search is made for the person wanted.

Here are some sample forms for putting in "Station to Station" calls.

Signal the operator in the usual way and ask her for long distance. When the long-distance operator answers say:

"Give me St. Louis; Main 1234. Will talk to anyone."

"Give me Milwaukee, Wis.; Smith, Brown & Company. Will talk to anyone."

"Give me Louisville, Ky.; James Robinson's residence, 648 Mulberry St. Will talk to anyone."

In a very great majority of cases it is found that a call made in this way either reaches the particular person wanted or the person who answers can take the message or handle the business.

Specimen rates for "Station to Station" and other classes of long-distance service may be found in the telephone directory. The manager will be glad to give additional information.
