CHILD LABOR LAWS

enactment of laws to protect children against exploitation in the factories and mines of the nation, but there is a sentiment, growing ought to be met by a more severe in ardor, which will overcome corrective than the displeasure of those difficulties without question. The only thing is when.

The exploitation of boys and girls of tender years in industry is the result of a greed that is colossal in its proportions. It is natural enough that there should be conviction that the only way in which to fight that greed is through measures which affect the pocketbook. Hearts are hardened in a measure that makes appeal to them a foolish waste of time.

Money talks, and its voice is listened to with attention by men who sit in public office. But public opinion speaks with an even louder tone and when the great American public reaches the point in its development of conscience where it appreciates the wickedness of condemning little children to the lives of the victims of the system of child labor, then that particular abuse of the children of

LOOKING TOWARDS UN-DERSTANDING

The spirit of fairness and evidence of an open mind on the part of physicians and practitioners in the established schools of medicine seem to be evident in the recent action of the American Medical Association looking towards the impartial investigation of the methods and theories of those groups that advocate and practice what they call drugless therapy. It is the wisest and most sensible course that the organized men of the medical profession could follow, for it will take away the claim that is made against them that opposition to the newest methods of healing is based upon ignorance and predudice, spiced with a bit of jealousy and fear for the financial wellbeing of the profession.

Physicians of the established schools are already taking much more thought for the mental state of the patient in its effect upon the physical wellbeing. Psychology has no small part in the science of healing as it is practiced today. It will do no harm for the regular practitioners to find out from those who use the newer methods just what it is that they rely upon and to become acquainted at first hand with instances which are claimed as proof of the principles which they profess.

THE "Y" FOR WOMEN

The belief that "woman's place is in the home" has been so long entertained, so accepted as true without any question of its truth that it is difficult to get it into the heads of a careless general public that there are millions of women in the United States who, however glad they might be to take their place in the home, are prevented by the fact that they have! none in fhich to stay. It is for these millions that the Y. W. C. A. is particularly designed, for these and a vast army of others whose homes provide none of the

SHIRKING THE JOB

The President is finding it difficult to keep the government functioning because of the habit of being somewhere else that is developed too highly in the members of the Difficulties lie in the way of the Congress. Work is all but at a standstill, and matters that are badly needing attention are left to take care of themselves. It is a failure in the discharge of duty that the President, for it is inimical to the public good and contrary to
