THE VACATION'S AFTERMATH

Summer epidemics of typhoid are beginning to be reported in the news, an ailment that is attendant of the vacation period, almost as certainly as the season comes. The passion that possesses the person, whose life and work lie in the city, to get into the country for the weeks that are granted for rest and recreation is too overruling for time and thought to be taken to consider the sanitary conditions about the place where the vacation is to be spent. The picnic party uses the water from the well, discovered by chance, or even from the bubbling brook, forgetful that clear, sparkling water may be filled with the deadliest sort of germs, and is surprised and shocked when some member of the gay crowd develops disease that brings weeks and months of suffering and loss.

Advertising copy concerning the resort which seeks to attract the summer visitor is copiously filled with description of scenery, the character of the fishing and the number and kinds of recreation to be found. But there is too often a complete silence concerning such important features as water supply and sanitary conditions generally, which are, or should be, after all, the great questions to be determined in the choice of a place to go for the play time allotted from business.

In the city the water and the milk supply receive constant attention from the health department. It is in the country, where there is "pure country milk," that danger lies, where the water is often polluted by sewage in a way that excites no alarm in the careless visitor. There would be a better report from the health department during the late weeks of summer and through the autumn were there a little more discretion exercised by those who spend the summer away from their city homes, in investigating health conditions with the same interest that is given to consideration of the opportunity for pleasure and sport.

ANOTHER STRAW

Progressives are rejoicing over the defeat of Senator McCumber in the North Dakota primaries. Republicans of the old guard are not sorrowing. Apparently nothing that the veteran senator has done in his public life has, in the minds of his constituency and his colleagues, so become him as the leaving of it.

There are gratifying signs of a healthful state of affairs within the Republican party, signs that that reform for which the Progressives stood ten years ago is being undertaken by the members of the party itself and is to proceed from within outward, the only effective way in which to raise the standards of any group, political or otherwise.

In the matter of the smuggling of alcoholic drinks into the country from the Bahamas and Bermuda, the United States finds itself somewhat in the same position as China when, more than a half century ago, England forced her at the point of the bayonet to submit to the opium traffic. It is a great blot on the good name of a nation that it should debauch another nation that its own coffers may be filled. Our own record in allowing the liquor traffic to be carried into Africa is not something in which we can take pride, though perhaps we are not directly responsible in a governmental way. It is too much to hope that we shall not be made in some way to suffer for our sins, whether of omission or of commission.

Save Time and Money

The modern business man knows that time can be saved by the use of the long-distance telephone. He does not, however, always realize the great and direct advantage of the personal touch which only the telephone can put into business which has to be done at a distance.

It is possible from the telephone on your desk to reach any one of more than 13,400,000 telephones in the United States and Canada. It will pay you to use the service regularly and not merely in emergencies.
