Man on Jury Watches Thief Steal His Car

West Frankfort, Ill.—Confined to a jury room deliberating a case, Neal Lampley, a juror, looked out of a window to see his Ford car being driven away from where he had it parked. Unable to give chase, the thief got a good start, but was captured during the night. The youth who took the car had been given a "lift" by Lampley early in the morning and evidently became attached to the purr of the motor.

SAYS FORD SEDAN APPEALS TO ALL

Dealer Points Out Advantages of Type

We have watched with considerable interest the increasing popularity of the "Sedan" car, says R. D. Cunningham.

The open car will of course always have its vogue and we never expect to see it done away with, but the increasing frequency with which one meets the neat, compact and comfortable little Ford sedan not only on our city streets but in the smaller places and even in purely rural districts, denotes that there are substantial and universal reasons for its adoption.

As a result of our investigations we have come to the conclusion that there are several arguments in its favor and while there might appear logical preference for a closed car in
