The Power of Personality

We often hear that the success of some man is due to his personality. This quality is hard to define in words, but we know that those who possess it have the gift of impressing or persuading others.

In salesmanship it is a most valuable asset. The long-distance telephone gives the salesman the power to use his voice and thereby retain the effect of his personality which might be lost by the use of other methods of communication.

If the salesman's voice is strong and cheerful and full of earnestness, it is his best advocate.
