A. B. C. F. M.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions is holding its 113th Annual Convention in Evanston this week. Of the many conventions which have come to our city none has a more interesting history or a wider influence than this great board of the Congregational Church. Organized at Bradford, Massachusetts, in 1810, by men of world-wide vision, it is the pioneer of all the large boards of both foreign and home missions now operating in the United States. A review of the names of the men who have made up its membership during its long period of activity would reveal many familiar to us as statesmen, scholars, educators and soldiers, but whom we have perhaps not thought of in a wider connection, so little do many of us know of the operations of this vast international force, with its missionaries, its churches, schools, colleges, hospital and other activities in every section of the globe.

Probably no one can speak with greater authority on the Near East question than this board whose missionaries have labored in Eastern Turkey since 1836, and in the Balkans since 1859, and who have stood at their posts or followed their flocks into exile through all the horrible years of war and massacre and pestilence and famine which have desolated the birthplace of Christianity. It is not strange that the advice of these men should be sought in international matters but passing strange that their wise counsel is not more often adopted.

Evanston is honored in being chosen as the meeting place of this body of consecrated men and women. Profitable and interesting hours may be spent in attending the daily and evening sessions of the convention and in viewing the quite wonderful exhibits. They will teach us that A. B. C. F. M. is not a mere cryptic arrangement of letters of the alphabet but stands for lives devoted to the carrying out of the Great Commission as given to the world by the Master Missionary.

"INEVITABLE"

One wonders at the warp in the moral nature of a man who can phrase his philosophy of life as Charles Garland, the millionaire farmer of Massachusetts, gives as his: "I live my own life in my own way and if it brings hurt beyond bearing to other people I can only say that I am sorry, but it's inevitable." A theory that leaves out of its body such things as duty and self sacrifice is a poor one upon which to erect a structure of life. It is small wonder the "soul mate" is succeeded by "mental mate," that the wife of his youth finds the "hurt to be beyond bearing."

Deep underneath the many, many cults with which people of today seek to satisfy their dissatisfaction with life as it is, or as they have made it, is selfishness pure and simple. The determination to escape the obligations that are put upon the conscientious brings up always the development of new theories that leave out the hard things in life. It may work for a while, but there will come the end when the emptiness of living for oneself alone is reflected in loss of all those normal ties that bind even though they may chafe at time. This it is that is inevitable.

A WAR GAIN

To make Camp Grant into an industrial institution where in morons may be segregated and taught how to perform set tasks satisfactorily enough to warrant wages would be to bring one good out of the war which we had not counted upon.

It is one of the crying shames of the times that persons who are mentally irresponsible for what they do should be permitted to exercise the same liberty of action and the same privileges of citizenship which normal people enjoy. Protection of society from the taint which shows in the abnormality of mental development ought to be a duty of the state. If the government is actually to undertake that obligation to the public through the conversion of the training camps into industrial plants in which vocational training shall be given to the unfortunates, there is hope that the time is not far distant when there will be general recognition of the evil of the present easy-going way and proper care provided for all who are unfit for free intercourse with their fellows.

P. J. CARR

County Treasurer P. J. Carr's extraordinary achievement in turning back to the people's account more interest on public funds than any predecessor in the history of the County has directed attention to his career previous to his appointment as County Treasurer.

He was born in Chicago September 4, 1880. He sold newspapers on the South Side corners not only to aid his parents but to earn money to pay his way through De LaSalle Institute. As a lad he was a popular figure in a wide neighborhood. At the age of 30 he was elected Alderman of the 5th ward, and re-elected to the same office in 1913.

As Alderman from the 5th ward he procured the abolition for all time of the obnoxious Bubbly Creek which for years had endangered the health of the people. The Creek was filled in and it was then possible to make Thirty-ninth street a thoroughfare from the Lake to the Forest Preserve.

As a member of the Board of Trustees of the Sanitary District of Chicago to which he was elected in 1914, he helped to reduce the typhoid rate from 174 per 100,000 to 1.4 per 100,000 persons.

He aided in reducing lighting costs from $105.00 per arc light to $9.38 per arc light.

He assisted in increasing number of street lights in Chicago from 6,693 to 50,674.

Consistently voted in committee and in Board meetings for the completion of the Calumet-Sag Channel.

As chairman of the Real Estate Committee of Sanitary District negotiated industrial leases along banks of the Canal increasing revenue to the Sanitary District to the amount of $1,701,188.00.

Voted to reduce the Sanitary District tax levy, making this levy the lowest in the history of the District.

Advocated the installation of intercepting sewers in small towns surrounding Chicago viz, Berwyn, Oak Park, Morton Grove, Des Plaines, Evanston, etc.

P. J. Carr assisted in making Chicago the most healthful and best lighted city in the world.

Mr. Carr was appointed by the County Board to succeed the late Harry Gibbons as County Treasurer in April, 1921.
