GUILD PLAY IS USUAL SUCCESS

"Come Seven" in "Pro" Fashion

The North Shore Theatre Guild presented in a professional way, on the evenings of February 22, 23 and 24, a comedy in black-face, by Octavius Roy Cohen. The performances of February 22 and 23 were given in the Assembly hall at Skokie school to a capacity audience. On February 24 the play was repeated at the Kenilworth club.

Before the play and between the acts a trio of musicians helped while away the time. Judging from the applause the audiences were well pleased.

This is the very first time "Come Seven" has been presented in Chicago and vicinity, and the Guild deserves great credit for its enterprise as well as for its artistic work. Elzvir Nesbit, as portrayed by Mrs. John Marshall, could not have laughed in a more truly African mode if she had been a sure-enough Ethiopian.

Percy Eckhart, who impersonated Rias Nesbit, made a remarkable hit, keeping the audience in an uproar most of the time by his humorous sallies. Vistar Goins, in real life Miss Douglas Whitehead, was a surprisingly up-to-date young malard, and J. Williams Macy, as Florian Slappey, that irrepressible accomplice of Rias Nesbit, was a living picture of the negro swell, bubbling over with get-rich-schemes. And did anyone ever see a more persistently loving and naturally admiring couple than Mr. and Mrs. Lawyer Chew, well known in our suburbs as Charles Eastman and Mrs. Guy Stuart Bailey?

The Guild's next play, also new to Chicago and north shore towns, will be presented about the first of April.
