

BLIND STUDENT LEARNS TO SWIM

N. U. Man Acquires Knowledge in 3 Lessons

Teaching a blind student the rudiments of swimming in three lessons is the latest accomplishment of Tom Robinson, Northwestern university's veteran swimming coach. Under Robinson's tutelage, Carl Bostrom, the blind student at Northwestern, was able to master the crawl stroke after two lessons, and now, following the third lesson Carl has no difficulty in swimming the length of the pool. The crawl stroke is especially adapted to the blind swimmer because it permits the hands to be in front of the body as protection.

Robinson asserts that this is proof that instructions, if followed carefully, are better than any number of demonstrations. His sole method of teaching swimming is by instruction as to the movement of the arms and legs, and as to the proper method of breathing.

Bostrom should learn to dive very quickly, Robinson says.

"When a beginner is learning to dive, he always shuts his eyes before reaching the water and does not know what he is doing. But Bostrom, who has become expert in his sense of touch, will be able to govern his actions once his finger tips touch the water," added the coach.

'Red Caps' Radiate Scenic Information

Have you been "scenically scintillated?" It's the latest innovation for tourists in the Colorado Rockies. No, it's not a "pass word" for thirsty souls seeking the harbor of synthetic sunshine coming from a moonshine distillery. It means, in effect: "Would you like historical, scenic and geological information about sightseeing trips?"

All winter long "red caps" at the station, hotel clerks and drivers of the tourist auto bus have been given a book course in scenic Colorado, then made actual trips to some of these spots. They are now in a position to more intelligently advise strangers about sightseeing trips.

The scenic geography used is known as the "Colorado Travelog," published for free distribution by the Denver Tourist Bureau. The practical phase is attributed to Martin E. Rowley, president of the Rocky Mountain Hotel Association. He and his associates took the managers and clerks on some of the more popular trips. Others followed.

So the station grip carrier, hotel clerk and scenic bus driver are radiating and scintillating scenic information.

Suspend Three Policemen For Alleged Misconduct

Patrolmen Joe May, Herman Vance and Gottfried Ahrendt of the Wilmette Police force were suspended Sunday, May 20, as the result of a collision early Sunday at a Wilmette street intersection, between a car in which they were passengers and a Bowman Dairy company milk wagon. The horse attached to the milk wagon was so seriously injured as to make it necessary to put it to death.

The policemen, village authorities explain, though on duty at the time, were not passengers of the machine in the pursuit of their duties.

Methodists Hold Rally To Promote Boys' Camp

Members of the Wilmette Parish Methodist Episcopal church, comprising the villages of Wilmette, Kenilworth and Winnetka, met in a Camp Rally Thursday evening of this week to discuss the prospective camping expedition of the boys of the parish this summer at Camp Stansell.

Stereoptican slides were shown depicting scenes at the camp last summer. The question of selecting a new camp site was to be considered and the parents urged to take an active interest in this recreational as well as educational enterprise.
