

ELECTRIC PLANT NEARLY FINISHED

Generating Station At Waukegan Big Achievement

Within two months it is expected the initial unit in the Public Service company's great new generating station at Waukegan will be contributing its 25,000 k. w. of energy to the district supply. In fact some members of the engineering staff are nearly ready to name the date when the plant will be in operation. The boilers and condensers are at this writing being erected. The brick work is far advanced and the electric work to care for the output of the generator is well underway. The coal handling equipment, its ingenious layout, its conveyor belt 1,000 feet long, and its various interesting details, worth a story by itself, will, it is expected, be ready shortly after this number of the News is in circulation.

Drying Out Fires

September 15 is set as the date for the starting of drying-out fires in the boilers. Unit implies one and you know of course that the generating unit means it is one machine. But you get an idea of its bigness from the fact that nine cars are required to transport it from the manufactory.

There are two banks of transformers on the grounds. Their function is to reduce current transmitted from the present Waukegan Station to the point necessary in actuating machinery used in erecting operations.

Progress at Joliet Plant

At the company's Joliet Electric Generating Station where an additional 30,000 k.w. generator is being installed, great progress has been made.

Four boilers are required as an addition to the present battery. It is expected that some time in November the new generator will be in operation.

The company has received the necessary permit from the state authorizing the construction of the Hydraulic Station at Aroma Park included in the development plans of the year and work on it will start this fall.

SCME DODGING

There are 189 causes of death, according to the official mortality score card adopted at an international vital statistics conference. Dodging that number of active enemies for 60 years or more requires considerable thought and information, ventured an onlooker.

BRYANT AND MABEL

A recent letter from Mabel Forrest (Mrs. Bryant Washburn) states that she and her husband have just finished their last picture together. Hereafter she is to be starred on her own and Bryant starts his own productions. His first picture will be "Try and Get It" from a story by Eugene P. Lyle, Jr., who wrote "The Americano" and "The Modern Musketeer" for Fairbanks. "Try and Get It" was originally called "The Ringtailed Galwampus" and published in the Saturday Evening Post.

DANGEROUS ADVICE

"Old wives' tales" is the millstone that buries many little tots who might otherwise help to cheer up a weary world, says the state health commissioner. Neighborhood advice on raising babies is usually on a par with that of the bald-headed barber on how to preserve hair.

Author Tireless Worker on His "If Winter Comes"

A. S. M. Hutchinson, the author of "If Winter Comes," of which William Fox has made a photoplay and which is now being shown at the Harris theater, Chicago, like many other novelists, started as a newspaper man and was once editor in chief of the London Daily Graphic. He is said to be a hard and steady worker when engaged on a novel, writing all morning and, very often, all evening. He has the reputation of being supersensitive to critical comment.

His first novel was "The Happy Warrior." This was followed by "Once Abroad A Lugger," "The Clean Heart" and "If Winter Comes." The remarkable sale of the latter work is literary history. The story takes its title from a line by Shelly, "..... Oh, Wind, If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind?"

Health Play Popular

The Health play, "Seven Keys," by Miss Frances A. Cook, Modern Health Crusade director for the Chicago Tuberculosis institute, is becoming so popular that Miss Cook is making engagements far ahead. Within the past few days she received a request to produce the little play at one of the Chicago schools in February.
