

New Trier Journalists Attend High School Press Convention

Many Schools Represented at Galesburg Session Last Week

The New Trier High school was represented Thursday and Friday of last week at the third annual convention of the Illinois High School Press association held at Galesburg.

The I. H. S. P. A. was organized two years ago for the purpose of affording high school publications a means of exchanging ideas and an opportunity for greater sociability. Members of this organization are at all times able to ask for and receive suggestions concerning journalistic problems, and can also keep in touch with the innovations, merits, or faults of other papers. Once every winter a conference is held at Knox college in Galesburg. To this conference are invited one or more delegates from each school publication. Talks by well known newspaper or magazine writers and discussion sessions make such conventions quite interesting and instructive.

In addition to the Illinois High School Press association there are many others in various parts of the country. The New Trier News, which is the student organ at New Trier High school, is a member of both the local organization and of the Central Interscholastic Press association, with headquarters in Madison, Wisconsin. Through these two sources the News is able to keep in touch with development and progress of the many high school papers in the Middle West.

Business Manager There

At the recent convention in Galesburg the New Trier News was represented by its business manager, Daniel Brower. He attended the several talks which were given during the two days of the meeting and brought back a report of the proceedings to the News staff.

Upon their arrival at Galesburg the delegates were taken to Knox college and registered. They were then assigned to various fraternity or sorority houses, which were to serve as their quarters for the duration of their stay. As soon as these preliminaries were concluded the visitors went to the Galesburg club, where luncheon was served by the Sigma Delta Chi fraternity.

Immediately afterwards an address was heard from S. S. McClure, editor and publisher of McClure's magazine, and a graduate of Knox college in the class of '82. He told his listeners of the great help he had received from his contact with people both during and after his days in school. This enabled him to put out a magazine which appealed to the public for it had a human touch.

Following this talk Mr. Whipple, editor of the Galesburg Evening Mail, extended to all delegates the privilege of visiting his plant.

Hear Eastern Journalist

At 4 o'clock there was a journalistic get-together in Seymour hall, at which John H. Finley, editor of the New York Times, spoke. In short, he said that those who throw themselves into a task and accomplish it well, not because of expected salary but because of real love of the work and devotion to it, will certainly receive a deserved reward. As an example he cited his own career. Only after thirty years of striving was he able to attain his present high position.

Another speaker was Professor Baker, who told the delegates something about Annuals.

That night the visitors were special guests at the "All College Dance."

Next morning Miss Ada Maskrey, teacher of journalism in the Galesburg High school, directed a round table discussion, at which the delegates talked over their difficulties and offered each other suggestions. After this conference hour Miss Mary Kinavey, president of Theta Sigma Phi, the national journalistic sorority, addressed the gathering in the growing possibilities for activity on the part of women in the field of journalism. Although as far as she could discover there have been only four women editors of Chicago dailies she felt that more places would be found open if the women displayed the requisite energy.

Newspaper's Influence

In the afternoon Prof. F. W. Beckman, head of the journalistic department at Iowa State college, talked on the service rendered to mankind by the newspaper. "The newspaper," he said substantially, "gives to the public the account of outside happenings, and so develops nationalism, molds opinion, and, next to schools, it is the great educator of the masses. Also, it breaks the isolation barriers which would otherwise surround small rural communities." Prof. Beckman added that the power held by the person in control of a newspaper is tremendous, and consequently should be used with the greatest care.

As a closing event of the convention the awards of honors were announced. "News N'Everything," the weekly put out by Robinson High school of Robinson, Illinois, was accredited with having the best front page makeup of any papers submitted. In the Annual class the year books of Rockford High school and of Moline High school were given the judges' decision.

Will This be your Thrift Week?

What you will have to enjoy tomorrow depends on what you save today. The future years will be happy ones if you start planning for them now.

We all know the importance and duty of saving. We owe it to ourselves as well as to our dependents to save against the time when need arrives for money to tide us over periods of adversity. Our principal thought then should be what to save and how to save it.
