

OFFER CLAVILUX CONCERT JAN. 26

Color-Organ to Be Heard at Evanston

The Clavilux, or color-organ, the invention of Thomas Wilfred, which aroused so much interest when shown here last year at the Skokie school, crowding the auditorium to the doors, and with many turned away, will again be presented in recital by Mr. Wilfred next Monday evening, January 26, at the Evanston Country club, which was secured by Rachel Busey Kinsolving, local manager, for the recital, because of its larger capacity. The recital is open to the public.

The Clavilux is the first instrument to make possible the development of light as a fine art. Though resembling a pipe organ it plays in color instead of tone. On a white screen in a darkened hall, beautiful color forms appear, assuming ever changing shapes, with one exquisite hue melting into another, glowing into vividness and fading away.

With its silent compositions thrown upon a screen, although apparently into infinite space, moving color is made to assume texture, depth, form, and rhythm at the absolute command of the artist at the keyboard. Ethereal it is, and because of its ethereal-ity it stirs the imagination as no other art has done.

To those who saw the Clavilux last year, the development of the instrument during the intervening months will be absolutely amazing. The Clavilux compositions before were abstract in form and manner, the mind could not associate the gorgeous coloring and rhythmic harmonies with familiar objects. The New Clavilux plays both tangible and abstract compositions, to many of which definite titles are given. This one group is entitled "Fairy Tale Suite," and is in three parts. In one of these, "A Tale of the Orient," one feels immediately the mystic atmosphere of the Orient in the bizarre colors and the unique forms. In a "Tale of the Deep Sea," the undulating motion of moving color gives an impression of drifting through the watery depths of a gorgeous southern sea; while in a "Tale of the Forest," one is walking among huge trees, now and then coming upon a vista of tropical flowers or seeing tiny fairy creatures.

There is another group of absolute humor, as well as a group of Clavilux settings for fantastic stage effects. Yet another strangely beautiful composition is called "Joy." Altogether the program shows marvelous advances in the control of concrete forms, as well as rich combination in abstract form, movement, tempo, and color harmonizations. The possibilities of the new instrument, which has five manuals instead of the three last year, are absolutely limitless.

To those who have never seen the Clavilux recitals, the awe and thrill experienced upon first viewing it, will never be forgotten, and to those who viewed it last year the recent remarkable developments will astonish and amaze.

Mr. Wilfred will present the Clavilux in recital at Mandel hall, University of Chicago next Tuesday evening after it has been shown in Evanston.

TOWNS MAY FIGHT RAIL RATE INCREASE

road come reports of bitter opposition to the proposed increase and determination to fight it to the end. Oak Park has taken steps to this effect and one town far out on the Galena division has announced its unalterable opposition to the plan and has appropriated $500 to carry on a fight against it. Evanston is opposing it vigorously and it is understood that the city council there has passed a resolution to fight the increase. The date of the hearing on the petition for the increase, filed with the Illinois Commerce commission last week by the railroad, has not yet been announced. Until this hearing no action can be taken by the various organizations opposing the rate increase.

A prominent official of a north shore village has suggested that commuters send in directly to the State Commerce Commission, Springfield, Illinois, letters expressing their individual attitude regarding the proposed rate increase. This plan might prove particularly effective he says inasmuch as the officials themselves would be benefitted by knowing the feeling entertained by the people at large.

U. S. Padlocks Alleged Moonshine Sales Place

After a fight of three years, the Winnetka police department seems about to win another round against Mrs. Cesare Ragghainti when the door to the downstairs portion of her home at 995 Linden avenue will be padlocked Monday, January 26, in accordance with a year's injunction issued by Federal Judge J. H. Wilkerson last Friday.

Judge Wilkerson ordered the doors padlocked at the request of the United States district attorney after Mrs. Ragghainti had been found guilty of selling wine in her rooming house. This is not the first time the Ragghainti family has encountered police interference, for, as long ago as November 1921, an injunction was issued closing the poolroom of Cesare Ragghainti for a year.

It has been since that time that Mr. Ragghainti died, but the selling of illicit beverages has continued, according to the police. Chief Petersen, in commenting on the case, said that over $1,200 had been spent by the village merely in obtaining evidence in the case. He expressed a determination to see that no liquor shall be illegally sold in Winnetka and for that reason requested the injunction.
