MANILA AND HONGKONG GIVE TOURIST A THRILL

Shops of Hongkong

cept for a few thoroughfares Hongkong streets march up-hill, and each shop is higher or lower than its neighbor. In a way we are reminded of certain streets in Naples. In these shops are everything to tempt the tourist. They are crowded with jades, jewels, curios, ivory work, shawls, silks, and drawn work. Olive-skinned dark-eyed Syrians vie with Chinese as shop-keepers but speak a better English.

But it's along the water front and the narrow streets reaching it like little rivers, that we see the real Chinese life. There are blocks of fish stores with seemingly more kinds of dried than there are in the ocean, from the great cods to the little minnows, and I saw a woman buy a handful of the latter for a copper cent. People eat on the sidewalk and there are gambling houses every few feet. The Chinese are the greatest gamblers on earth, and the poor coolie will wager his day's toil in the hope of doubling it in some easier way. Shoemakers ply their trade on the curb, and the great long-horned hump-backed oxen blink solemnly and pull their heavy loads. A coolie panted up the street with over 60 bricks suspended from his shoulders, and another brushed people aside with his 45 gallon empty tin cans.

Pigs and Humans

From the balconies flapped thousands of shirts and fabrics like flocks of scare-crows. A huge open market had every conceivable kind of flesh cut up in sizes from a penny's worth to a whole pig, and people carried their purchases away tied to a string but unwrapped. Twenty-five coolie girls passed along. Each with a burden of two heavy baskets filled with sand and building material, and later, I saw the one motor truck, I have noticed, with a hundred baskets of material, and it moved fast and without effort.

One Chinaman followed me a whole block trying to entice me to his ship, up some dark narrow stairs, where he sold goods "welly cheap" and along came two men carrying a live pig. He was alive with feet in the air and helpless on the sagging canvas but squealing just the same. Farther down some streets narrow down to about eight feet, and pigs, chickens, and animal life, live and breath in the same houses with humans.

And up on the hills, along those classic levels, in homes like individual castles, white men live and look down in this Oriental existence, but as much separated as if by a continent.

Another striking sight was the soldier's barracks in the heart of the city and the recruits practicing bayonet drill, sticking great bags of straw as they passed, while hundred of white-lipped Chinamen looked on in petrified astonishment, seemingly glad for the great iron fence that separated them from this handful of foreign devils.

Yours truly,
J. M. BROWN.

IN MEMORIAM

Funeral services for Mr. Caniff Fretz, Prudential Life Insurance agent who passed away suddenly, Thursday, February 12th, 1925, were
