

GENUINE THRILL IN GUILD PLAY

"Outward Bound" Promises to Provide the Unusual in Dramatic Endeavor

RIVER STYX INVOLVED

Carefully Selected Cast in Performance

By L. T. D.

In considering the play "Outward Bound," to be presented by the North Shore Theatre Guild, one is reminded of John Kendrick Bangs' story, "The Houseboat on the Styx," and can at once realize how possible it is to treat a serious subject, even death itself, in a most high comedy manner.

In the first act of the play the climax provides a thrill that comes but once in a theatrical season, say the critics. A strong company of shipmates, mystified by a vaguely oppressive feeling of unreality and uncertainty, suddenly discover that every last one of them is dead. Their ship, unmanned and without lights, is gliding noiselessly across the river Styx, and when one of the characters, in terror, asks the sole attendant whether they are bound for heaven or hell, the answer is, "Both! It's the same place, you see!"

Among the players who will present this extraordinary play will be several appearing for the first time with the Guild, although not new to the north shore.

New Faces in Play

Mrs. Cecil Barnes of Lake Forest, a sister of Mrs. Samuel Chase will play the part of Mrs. Cliveden-Banks. Ernst von Ammon, whose artistic work has long been recognized, will have the pivotal part, the Rev. William Duke. William Van Kirk of the New Trier high school faculty, makes his first appearance as "Scrubby," and his work has won great praise from those who have witnessed rehearsals. Miss Julia Hanks, dramatic director at Roycemore, will play "Ann" opposite the "Henry" of Ogden Cook. L. L. Buchanan, J. Williams Macy and Guy Stuart Bailey will carry important roles in their faithful and sustained manner.

In no respect is the growth of dramatic art in this community more noticeable than in the attitude of the audiences. Where once personal congratulations to a friend on a part "wonderfully" done, was in order, one now looks more at the play as a whole and demands a satisfactory ensemble. This teamwork has been especially stressed in "Outward Bound." Individuals will be forgotten in the dramatic values of the whole.
