Mrs. Caroline T. Harman, Educator, Taken by Death

Mrs. Caroline Tompkins Harman, wife of Richard J. Harman of Wilmette, died at the North Shore Health Resort, Winnetka, Friday afternoon, April 24, where she had been a patient since last November.
She had been a resident of Wilmette for three years, formerly residing in Rockford, Ill., at which place for a number of years she had been prominent in educational circles through her activities in ungraded rooms of the Rockford public school system. During her residence in Wilmette she had done similar work in the public schools of Evanston and was actively engaged at the time she was stricken.

Mrs. Harman was a graduate of the University of Illinois, and of Normal university, Normal, Ill., a woman of keen intellect and devoted to her work. Services were held Saturday afternoon at the residence, 730 Central avenue, and also at the home of her sister, Mrs. A. C. Dooly of Downs, Ill., where she was born July 5, 1888. Mrs. Harman is also survived by another sister, Mrs. Floyd Scharf, of Bloomington, Ill., and her mother, Mrs. Mrs. Olive Tompkins, of Downs Ill.

BUSTER KEATON SMILES

Buster is teaching the baby to smile, and every week is laugh week at the Keaton home.
Those who declare that Buster Keaton never smiles, either on or off the screen would get a most amusing surprise if they could see Buster teaching his eldest son and heir, three-year-old Joe Keaton, how to smile.
Each evening after the day is done at the studio, Buster takes the baby on his knee and draws up his face into all sorts of grimaces.
Buster gets down on all fours and shows the baby how a laughing hyena looks when at work. Then he holds his sides and does a fat man chuckle until baby chuckles too.
