Memoirs of WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

The Most Important Personal Document of the Century

Bryan wrote his own life before he died. Wrote it in his masterful English. Dealt with all the big characters of his period. Wrote it without bitterness or rancor, but put into it all of the brilliancy of anecdote and the terseness of style and the powerfulness of character that made him three times master of the Democratic Party.

And now this most remarkable personal story has been secured exclusively for the Chicago Sunday Herald and Examiner.

From the day in his fourteenth year, when he became deeply religious, up through his college career, when he clerked in a country store to pay his way, and on to his "Cross of Gold" speech which made him world-famous in an hour, Mr. Bryan's life is as intensely interesting and personal as any story ever written. And from there on through his own three National campaigns and up to the time when, failing to make himself president, he made Wilson president, is as important an historical document as ever was written into the annals of American history.

This tremendous personal story, reaching through to the interests of millions of people, will appear exclusively in
