A Stepchild Nobody Loves

WHEN you come right down to it a coal furnace is somewhat of a stepchild around the house. The modern "Orphan Annie" as it were. Of course, you can usually manage someway to heat your house with coal—but the 8th wonder of the world is how it really gets done. We've talked to somewhere in the neighborhood of 7,000 home owners. "Who tends your furnace anyway?" has always been one of our questions. But we've never made any friends by asking it. Fathers simply have to admit that if they're earning enough to support the modern family, their time's too valuable to put in at stoking a furnace. And after mother has read an advertisement for Pond's Two Creams or Jordan Play Boys she certainly is in no mood to mix with shovel or coal bin. It takes just one sentence to dismiss the absurd idea of anyone's maid playing stoker. And as long as football, ice skating, and coasting are in vogue there's precious little use in counting on help from the youthful members of the family. That leaves the janitor; not to speak of his pay check. He alone can afford to be liberal minded on the subject of coal—he doesn't pay for it.

You cannot hire men to do what Oil-O-Matic does for you. So any home owner who "puts up" with coal does so now only because he wants to. This modern method, proved for nearly seven years, is available to every home owner with any type of good heating plant. A storage tank for oil is installed. Your oil dealer keeps it filled. The oil is drawn in automatically from this tank into the Oil-O-Matic. Your Oil-O-Matic is connected to the front of your present furnace or boiler. No part goes inside. It supplies oil as fuel in place of coal so nebulized as to produce an intense, pure flame. Hotter than a great bed of hot coals. In your living room is a thermostat connected with the Oil-O-Matic downstairs. This automatically starts and stops the burner as the room temperature varies. Simply set the indicator at the temperature you enjoy and forget you have a heating plant. Everything else is done automatically. Oil-O-Matic will be your choice if you want everything that science and the largest oil burner manufacturer can give you. Write, phone, or call for a library edition of our latest book on Oil Heated Homes and suggestions for more pleasant use of your basement space. Send for it today.
