

Invite to Courses in Spoken English and Public Reading

Classes in spoken English and reading will be offered in Community House by Mrs. Frederick Dickinson, it was announced this week. This course will include not only practice in public speaking and the collecting of extemporaneous material for reading and speaking, but will give special emphasis on voice production, and its correct use, and breath control. The class for women will begin Thursday afternoon, October 22, and the course for young men and women on Tuesday evening, November 3.

"In this day when so many women are speaking before groups of people as never before, such a course comes as a real opportunity under Mrs. Dickinson's direction, to those interested," a Community House worker points out. "We are often impressed by the fact that it is not alone what is said that carries with an audience, but how it is said. The quality of the voice and the ability to be heard are important factors in success in this line, and also are useful in ordinary conversation."

"This is a ten weeks' course, given in response to requests. For further information call the office of Community House, or Mrs. Frederick Dickinson, Winnetka 648."

Alexander Dean Offers Course of Interesting Lectures to Two Winnetka Groups

Alexander Dean, associate professor of dramatic speech at Northwestern University School of Speech, is giving a course of lectures on contemporary drama, the course having started Wednesday, October 7, and to continue on every subsequent Wednesday up to and including December 9.

These lectures are given under the joint auspices of the Winnetka Woman's club and the Community Drama club. All desiring to enroll at some time are requested to make application to Mrs. Myron T. Harshaw.

In engaging Mr. Dean to speak on plays now being shown in Chicago and New York the Winnetka Community Drama club is carrying on the extensive program so successfully presented last season. This year it is not only offering the course mentioned above, to be given on Wednesday, but also another on Friday afternoons dealing with stage make-up. Both series are open not only to the club members but also to the general public.

Each lecture will include critical and constructive instruction for the appreciation of plays given in Chicago. Already there is a large enrollment in the class. Mr. Dean, besides being a member of the school of speech faculty, is also director of the North Shore Theatre Guild and a frequent contributor to the literature of the drama. His book on "The Little Theater," its history, organization, and management will be published in January by D. Appleton and company. He has also written a popular one-act play.
