

Thistlethwaite Is Best "Mudder" in Football Realm

Northwestern's victory over Michigan on the water-soaked gridiron of Soldiers' Field last Saturday gave Coach Thistlethwaite further prestige in his record of never having lost a football game on a wet and muddy field. The Purple mentor has demonstrated in numerous contests that a battle with the elements is much to his liking.

Back in his playing days at Earlham, when he was captain of the 11 in 1907, his team won a 28 to 0 victory over Butler in a game played on a muddy field on the American Association baseball field at Indianapolis.

Later as coach at Earlham in 1911 his team defeated DePauw at Greencastle 12 to 0. The week preceding the game the ground was frozen hard and on Saturday was thawed out by a steady downpour which turned the playing field into a bog in which it was almost impossible to walk.

Eight years later while coach at Oak Park high school Chicago, the Oak Park team went to Detroit to play Steele high school for the national prep championship. Here again rain fell steadily for several days before the game and again he was forced to send his men out upon a quagmire of mud. Herb Steger, at the present time assistant backfield coach with the Purple, was captain of the Oak Park team. The Chicago 11 won the game 19 to 6.

So, when Saturday's game arrived, the condition of the playing field was not a new condition for the Purple mentor. He had met such handicaps many times before, and was thus able to direct the strategy of his men through the experience learned in many previous games.
