

TRAIN RAIL WORKERS IN FIRST AID DUTY

North Shore Line Girls' and Men's Teams Make Enviably Records in Life-Saving

Girl employes of the Chicago, North Shore and Milwaukee railroad—the North Shore Line—are active and interested participants in the First Aid work undertaken by the company.

The North Shore Line is making an enviable record in its First Aid work. For several years an organized effort has been made to train all employes how to meet emergencies calling for First Aid treatment. This training includes cases of drowning, heat, prostration, suffocation, asphyxiation, electrical shock and other possible accidents.

Many lives have been saved through practical application of this training by North Shore line employes. In the majority of cases the aid has been given to persons not employed by the company and in accidents occurring when the employes were not on duty.

That the First Aid work of the North Shore line organization has been successful is attested by public recognition. Most notable was the recent selection of a previous North Shore Line Girls' First Aid Drill team, to appear in demonstrations before the annual convention of the Illinois Association of Graduate Nurses at Springfield.

Lenore Tobin, R. N., chairman of the convention program committee, in commenting on the North Shore line first aid work following the demonstration, said: "It is surely a decided contribution to the useful education of our citizens for your company to disseminate such training among the employes of your organization."

Mabel McClenahan, R. N., former chairman of the Public Health section of the association, commending the girls for their excellent showing, said: "This is certainly a good piece of work in the Public Health field."

The feature of North Shore Line First Aid work is its progressiveness. Seven men's teams have been graduated, and the eighth team is now in training. Other girls' teams will follow the one which has just completed its training.
