

Hay Loft Attracts Great Throngs of Eager Fun-Seekers

Hey, Its Open! Hundreds of north shore folk have discovered that fact. We refer, of course, to the Old Hay Loft, that novel and entertaining dine and dance place inaugurated at Evanston last Saturday by Frint George, leading entertainment producer, who has lately added the role of restaurateur to his extended roster of noteworthy pursuits.

The Old Hay Loft was formally opened last Saturday evening when Evanston and north shore folk flocked to the place to welcome with open arms the only permanent dinner dance salon this side of Edgewater. And they've been coming ever since opening day, according to Mr. George. Several times it has been found impossible to accommodate the throngs of fun-seekers who daily storm the doors of the Loft. Already, various luncheon clubs have sought out the Loft as a regular meeting place, among these the Evanston Kiwanis club, a Northwestern sorority, and the Evanston City officers' club.

The Hay Loft has the endorsement of the Northwestern university authorities, the Evanston Woman's club and various other prominent groups.

Train Future Teachers to Teach Health to Children

Potentially the most significant development of the year in health work in Illinois, according to Dr. Isaac D. Rawlings, state health director, is the recent culmination of plans for introducing compulsory health educational courses in the five state normal universities. The object, which has the endorsement and support of all the officials concerned, is to give the future public school teachers of the state a practical training in fundamental hygienic and sanitary principles that will enable the teachers, in turn to inculcate correct habits and ideas of healthful living into the school children of the state. Comprehensive in scope, the operation of the plan is expected ultimately to reach into the entire public school system of the state and is hoped to exercise a profound influence over the physical well being of the whole population.
