N. U. Stadium Plans Nearing Completion; Work to Start Soon

President Walter Dill Scott and Business Manager A. Dyche of Northwestern university returned this week from New York, where they visited the architects and engineer of the proposed new Purple stadium. The indications now are, according to Dr. Scott, that the plans will be ready within a few weeks and that construction will start as early in the spring as the weather will permit.

"We now feel fairly sure that construction will start in ample time to have the new stadium completed by the opening of the 1926 football season," said Dr. Scott. "If the plans reach us, as expected, and are approved by experts here, there should be no question about it. If the plans must be changed, we think that it can and will be done within a short time, rendering it entirely possible for the builders to proceed and complete the stadium in time for the opening game. The plans for the proposed Woman's Campus at Northwestern university in Evanston also are being expedited and while we do not know just what date these will be finished, it is indicated that the work is progressing as rapidly as possible."

President Scott added that the new woman's campus, to contain fourteen sorority buildings and a Woman's Building, is such a stupendous undertaking that the plans and specifications must be prepared with greatest care. After each building has been planned, the blueprints must be submitted to the women's committee and if all is approved, contracts will be let. The woman's campus, it was explained, is such a gigantic undertaking that the setting of exact dates for starting construction should not be expected at this time.
