

What does STEVENS say?

IT is a rare tribute to Ashton Stevens that the exacting people of the theatre hold him in as high regard as a critic as the public itself holds him.

“What does Stevens say?” is on everyone’s tongue after a first night, actors and theatre-goers alike.

There is good reason for this dual respect. In a long and brilliant career Stevens has never fooled the public. His criticism of a piece is known to the end of the land as honest, intelligent, constructive.

Stage people love him for his helpfulness, his gentleness, his scrupulous fairness—even when the acid of his criticism burns deep!

Stevens’ daily column in the Herald and Examiner is but one of many striking features which make that newspaper such a widely accepted source of information, entertainment and education.
