PHONE 50 YEARS OLD

Telephone Employees to Wear Buttons Commemorating Golden Jubilee of Industry

Distribution of memorial buttons has been started among employes of the Illinois Bell Telephone company and other telephone companies throughout the state of Illinois. The button is to be worn March 10 in celebration of the completion of fifty years of the telephone.

On March 10, 1876, in Boston, the first complete sentence was heard over the telephone. The sentence was, "Mr. Watson, come here; I want you," and it was spoken by Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor, and heard by his assistant, Thomas A. Watson, in an adjoining room. From this small beginning the use of the telephone has grown until in 1925 the telephone was used more than 50,000,000 times daily in the Bell System alone. The telephones connecting the two rooms in Boston have grown to nearly 17,000,000 in the United States.

The fiftieth-year button will be worn not only by Illinois employes, but by those all over the United States and Canada. The greatest number of telephone men and women in any state in the union is in Illinois. This state has more than 70,000 including the employes of the independent and rural companies and those of the large manufacturing organizations in Chicago, the largest of which is the Western Electric company, manufacturing telephones and apparatus for the Bell System. The telephone industry as a whole employes about 400,000 persons.

This year will be observed generally as the telephone jubilee and the observance will be continued throughout the year in various ways. On the night of March 10, the members of the Theodore N. Vail Chapter No. 1, Telephone Pioneers of America, will be hosts at a large dinner and entertainment to be given in the refectory of the Hawthorne works of the Western Electric company.
