The Letters of QUEEN VICTORIA

Publication Authorized
By King George

In the following cablegram from Lord Stamfordham, private secretary to the King.

William Randolph Hearst, Esq., New York.

The King is very glad that through the popular newspaper press of the United States, a full presentation of Queen Victoria's character and personality, as revealed in her letters, should be made to the American people, between whom and her in her lifetime mutual feelings of sympathy and friendliness never failed. (Signed) Stamfordham.

How Remarkable She Was We Are Just Finding Out

She kept Europe out of war for sixty years.

To her, the great Wilhelm, Emperor of Prussia, and Nicholas, Czar of Russia, were Willie and Nicky, to be talked to effectively like naughty children when they threatened the peace of Europe.

And so she did talk to them and so she kept the peace.

Less than a dozen years after she died they had destroyed the peace of Europe and sent six million men to their death—a thing they never would have dared to do if Victoria had been alive.

She lived through and controlled the diplomatic policies of five Prime Ministers and apparently was the mental equal of them all.

In addition to which, as Bill Nye put it, she managed to rear nine children.

We are just beginning to learn how great a woman this Queen Mother was. The perspective of a quarter of a century was necessary.

Her intimate letters and papers and her own diary give the most remarkable side lights on nineteenth century history that the world has ever seen.

These papers are now being published for the first time.

They begin next Sunday and will appear each week in the Sunday Herald and Examiner
