Tuberculosis Toll Found Heaviest in "Egypt" Territory

Tuberculosis in Illinois last year took its heaviest mortality in Union county where the rate was 296 per 100,000 population, according to Dr. Isaac D. Rawlings, state health director. With rates of 239 and 154 respectively, Pulaski and Alexander counties, lying contiguous to Union in the extreme southern portion of the state, ranked second and third highest in mortality from the dreaded white plague.

Woodford county, located in the northern section of the state, experienced the least loss with a rate of only 10 deaths per 100,000, while the adjacent county of Marshall stood next lowest with a rate of 20. Carroll county, also to the north, was third lowest with a rate of 20½.

Among the 44 cities of 10,000 or more people, the most severe mortality from tuberculosis was reported from Lincoln where the rate was 276. Next in order came Jacksonville and Cario with rates of 208 and 200. Ottawa, with a loss of only 26 per 100,000 population, had the lowest municipal rate while Rockford with 32 and Streator with 33 stood second and third.

The 35 counties in the central section of the state with something more than a million people had the lowest regional mortality from tuberculosis. Here the rate was 68 per 100,000 population. In the 33 most northern counties, where the population exceeds four and one-half million, the mortality rate from tuberculosis was 82 as compared with 84 in the 34 most southern counties with a total population of scarcely more than one million.
