18th Festival Ends; Hailed as Artistic and Popular Success

Evanston's eighteenth annual music festival passed into history Tuesday evening with the final performance of the season.

Spread over ten days, the six concerts and attendant features gave the community a series of performances from the artistic viewpoint quite comparable to the high standards set by past seasons.

Between 3,000 and 4,000 patrons attended every performance, including the Saturday afternoon children's matinee performance. The chorus of 1,200 children's voices was directed for the first time this year by John W. Beattie, supervisor of music in the public schools, who succeeded Osborne W. McConathy who had charge of this festival feature for many years. The matter of performance was a genuine credit to Mr. Beattie's training.

Violinist Scores Success

The playing of young Miss Lent, violinist of the occasion, was a matter of complete delight and interest to the audience.

Saturday evening the Chicago Symphony orchestra played the five scores selected from the 80 symphonic compositions entered in the $1,000 prize competition arranged by the festival association. The judges, Henry Hadley, Howard Brockway and Adolf Weidig, awarded the prize to the number, "Tragic Overture" written by Edward Collins of Chicago. This was played by the orchestra in the final program of Tuesday evening.

Numbers by the A Cappella choir, directed by Dean Peter C. Lutkin, interspersed this program.

Plan Next Year's Festival

Monday evening the presentation of Brahms' "A German Requiem," with Mabel Garrison and Boris Saslawsky the soloists, scored a great success for the 660-voiced festival chorus. The A Cappella choir was met with enthusiasm in its singing of Rachmaninoff's "Glory Be to God" and "Laud Ye the Name of the Lord."

Tuesday evening's soloists, Dusolina Giannini and Lawrence Tibbett, singing a miscellaneous program with the chorus, gave the festival close a brilliant ending. Plans are already under way for an even more interesting season next May, according to the business manager, Fred Smith.
