NEW BOOKS

Books That You May Have Missed.

London River by H. M. Tomlinson. "If the evening was one of those which seem longer than usual but still have far to go, it was once a custom of Millwall to find a pair of boots of which it could be claimed that it was time they were mended, and to carry the artful parcel around to Mr. Pascoe. His cobbler's shop was in a street that had the look of having retired from the hurry and press of London, aged, dispirited, and indifferent even to its defeat, and waiting vacantly for what must come to elderly and shabby despondence. Each grey house in the street was distinguished but by its number and the ornament which showed between the muslin curtains of its parlour window. The house of Jones had a geranium, and so was different from one neighbor's with a ship's model in gypsum, and from the other whose sign was a faded photograph askew in its frame. When I first visited Mr. Pascoe, as there was no window ornament to distinguish his place from the others, and his number was missing, I made a mistake, and went next door. Through a hole drilled in that wrong door a length of cord was pendant, with a greasy knot at its end. Underneath the knot was chalked 'Pull.' I pulled. The door opened on a mass of enclosed night. Empty space was luminous beyond the cave. Becoming used to the gloom I saw chains and cordage hanging from the unseen rough. What was faintly the prow of a boat shaped near. Then out from the lumber and suggestions of things a gnome approached me. 'Y' want ole Pascoe? Nex' dore, guv'nor!' At that moment, in the square of bright day at the end of the darkness, the apparition of a ship silently appeared, and was gone again before my surprize. That open beyond was London River."

Life's Minor Collisions by Frances Warner.

"Minor friction is the kind that produces the most showy results with the smallest outlay. You can stir up more electricity in a cat by stroking her fur the wrong way than you can by dropping her into the well. You can ruffle the dearest member of your family more by asking him twice if he is sure that he locked the back door than his political opponents could stir him with a libel. We have direct access to the state of mind of the people with whom we share household life and love. Therefore, in most homes, no matter how congenial, is a certain amount of minor friction, inevitable."

"Four typical causes of minor friction are questions of tempo, the brotherly reform measure, supervised telephone conversations, and tenure of parental control. These are standard group-irritants that sometimes vex the sweetest natures."

The Francis Butlers have rented their home on Private road and are spending the summer in the East.

Mr. and Mrs. Everett L. Harris are leaving Winnetka Wednesday, for Montreal to sail for six weeks of travel abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh A. Foresman, 515 Essex road, Kenilworth, entertained a group of their friends at their Barrington farm the Fourth of July.
