

Variety of Jobs Sought by N. U. First Year Men

This is a year of exceptional according to C. D. Norton, secretary of the Northwestern University "Y." There are more applicants for work today than there were a year ago at the same date, Mr. Norton states, and the sorts of labor the youngsters are seeking are extremely diverse. One young man wrote that he is more or less expert on the saxophone, is able to improvise music, is a fairly good newspaper reporter, has had experience as a soda fountain clerk, as a grocery and clothing store clerk, and is a fast short-hand man.

"If an opening should occur along these lines before school opens," he writes Secretary Norton, "I shall appreciate your assistance in placing me."

Three youngsters have written to the secretary that they play well on the pipe organ, the first college freshmen with this distinction at Northwestern. Another lad has been supplying as a pastor for five months but is also an expert statistician and he wants a job in either capacity. A third applicant wants a job as either a typist or tutor. Still another wants to work for a press association because of his experience, or to act as a telephone operator. A youth who is worried about educational expenses wants a job as a trap drummer, or as a general painter or as a railroad ticket office man. A Chicago boy coming to Northwestern says he wants a job as an electrician but would take an advertising job, in lieu of the other.

One of the most attractive "prospects" Secretary Norton says is a young Japanese who, for five years, has been working his way through college and is now coming to Northwestern to win a Ph. D. degree. He says:

"I shall be glad to sweep rooms and would like to get into a good Christian American home so that I may know more of the way Americans live in the Middle West." This ambitious student got an M. A. degree from the University of Texas, last year.

Miss Virginia Buchanan, L. L. Buchanan and Perry B. Buchanan, 591 Cherry street, have returned from a two months' stay at their cabin on Big Bass lake, Vilas county, Wis.

The Commonwealth

IN the American constitution its makers attained a two-fold achievement: they provided a central form of government equipped to perform national functions adequately, and they left to local governing bodies the responsibility of local affairs. The people's need, as manifest even in the nation's babyhood, determined this governmental structure.

The Bell System is a similar division of responsibility, visioned from a forecast of the nation's communication needs when the telephone was young in service. The Associated Companies are specialists in local service problems, with local operating forces identified and familiar with the needs of the communities they serve. The parent company undertakes the solution of the problems that are common to all.

America to-day has a telephone service that is nationwide and unified. A backward look to the beginnings of the telephone shows that this could not have come about without an organization paralleling that of the American Union, capable of expanding with the growth of the nation.
