A Service Without Limitation

YEAR by year the telephone equipment wears out and has to be replaced at prices much higher than the original cost of the old plant. This adds constantly to the average investment per telephone, on which a return must be earned. The company's revenues must keep up with this rise.

THE electric speaking telephone is fifty years old this year. The first conversation was held in 1876.

Those who can look back to a time when there was no telephone service can recall the inconveniences and long delays which were often associated with the most important affairs. But the younger generation could scarcely imagine a world in which there were no telephones.

The instrument invented by Bell and developed into a great utility by his successors has become the most useful of all modern devices to promote convenience.

In our modern day the uses of the telephone are absolutely without limitation.
