Tony Shows His Gang to What Uses a Medicine Ball Can Be Put in an Extreme Emergency

"Hey! Mista, you know dees medicine ball what you plays wit, heh?" asked Tony, the Italian, with his broad grin, fine white teeth, thick shoulders and shock of black hair. "I want one of dem, queek!" he said with a sweep of his cap and a bow, for Tony has excellent manners.

What he wanted to do with a medicine ball he couldn't explain in English, so finally broke off with, "You comma see, I show you."

It seems that Tony is foreman of a gang in Winnetka who were connecting a water pipe. Through miscalculations, the water pipe on dry ground was made to connect with one four feet under the level of Lake Michigan, and Tony was stuck.

He couldn't shut off the water supply at the right place. His twenty Italians were getting not only talkative but explosive. They were standing in four feet of icy water, fooling around with a pipe put in the wrong place by a lot of white-collared engineers who didn't know their business. The Italian language in all its phases was flying.

With a strange word Tony silenced his gang. He took the medicine ball and attached a long rubber hose to the nozzle of the "bladder." Going back some twenty feet from the point where the connection was to be made, he deflated the ball and poked it through the pipe, around bends and turns, within six feet from the opening.

The gang's eyes were wide open. Their hands were flying in every direction. Attaching a small pump, Tony blew up the ball until it completely filled the pipe. Then with a curt word and a shake of the fist at the astonished Italians, he ordered the connection to be made. The water was held back by the drum formed by an inflated medicine ball.

"See, Mista, she works!" beamed Tony after the connection was made, the ball deflated and the twenty feet of rubber hose pulled out.

a Joy Spot — Ventilate it*

Cleanliness in the home should begin in the kitchen—here is the source of greasy fumes and cooking odors which float through the house and linger for hours. Nowadays the modern kitchen is ventilated with an

ILGAIR

The ILGAIR is a compact, quiet-running direct connected exhaust fan with a fully enclosed, self-cooled motor that can be easily installed in your window sash or wall opening. A turn of the switch affords a constant circulation of pure, invigorating air and all objectionable cooking odors, fumes and greasy atmosphere are quickly removed.

It's a joy to work in a kitchen that is ventilated with an ILGAIR. Many homes on the North Shore have installed it.

The cost is very nominal $35 and up—and can be arranged on easy monthly payments.

See it in our store or ask to have a salesman call. No obligations.
