Women's Dresses

With an Interesting Dignity of Line

Dresses similar to the model illustrated (though not exactly like it) — graceful and youthful, but not juvenile.

Some quite elaborate — others simple enough to wear for a morning's shopping — and on to the bridge luncheon and tea.

This group features rich crepe satins. A gold-colored one has the smart low beltline, and a beige georgette vestee. Another, black crepe faille, has a cluster-pleated skirt. Tan crepe satin has piping and a vestee of white crepe de chine.

Georgettes predominate in this group. A black one has a shirred front, with a long shawl collar that ties at low waistline. A jade green georgette has a matching skirt panel of shirred panne velvet to match, and deep cuffs of the same lovely, shimmering stuff.

In this group are several outstanding models. One of these is of crepe romaine, most attractively embroidered and braided in gold.

Lovely in quality and of flattering lines is one black crepe back satin with deep bands and cuffs of silver embroidered net, and at the neck a graceful tie. Another distinctively styled dress is of oakwood crepe romaine, the simplicity of which is broken only by an interesting arrangement of bands richly embroidered in tan chenille and gold.
