Noted Bass-Baritone to Sing Tuesday at First Meeting of North Shore Society at Home of Dwight Orcutt

The North Shore MacDowell society opens its season Tuesday evening, November 16, at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Dwight C. Orcutt in Hubbard Woods. An all American program is announced to be given by Rollin Pease, one of the outstanding bass-baritones of the country. This society reports a constant growth, not only from the ranks of artists but also among north shore residents who realize more and more that creative art needs the support of the public.

The MacDowell colony is not a charity, a school, a summer resort, a sanatorium, or a camp. It is the first attempt to provide a place where artists may work to the best advantage, as a scientist works in a laboratory, an astronomer in an observatory, a surgeon in a hospital, an explorer fitted out with an expedition, an executive equipped with telephone and dictagraph.

The needs of the artist's workshop are less tangible, but no less expensive and hard to obtain. The colony can be more self-supporting than can a university, a museum or the Academy at Rome. It must have equipment and endowment.

All over the country MacDowell societies are contributing their dues, thus assisting materially with running expenses, but what those interested are working towards is an adequate endowment fund to insure the colony's future.
